KILLED IN ACTION.

First Napanee Boy to Loose His Life in the War.

Word was received in Napanee on Monday, of the death in action of Corp. Guy Chapman, youngest son of Mrs. Jane Chapman, Clarksville. Deceased was a resident of Napanee up to a few years ago when he went to Winnipeg, Man., and when war broke out he enlisted in that city and was with the eighth battalion in the fight at Ypres.

Mr. Chapman was employed in Wonderland when it was first started in Napanee and was proprietor of it for some time. He was also a member of Grace church choir. His many friends in Napanee were sorry to learn of his death, though he died manfully doing his duty. Besides his widowed mother, two brothers, Claude and James, and one sister, Mrs. Zaphy, remain.

SUMMARY OF WAR TO WEDNESDAY NIGHT

The people of Italy are getting out of hand. Great demonstrations are occurring in the principal cities in favor of war, and the cry of "Down with Austria" resounds everywhere. The Cabinet still hopes that Austria will make concessions in Istria which will satisfy the aspirations of the Italian people, but that hope has been abandoned by the press and an overwhelming majority of the people. The Pope, who has been using all his influence to prevent war, now believes that a rupture will come within a few days.

If Italy, after all her hesitation, declares war it will be to add to her territory the portions of the Austrian provinces of Trent and Istria which are regarded as Italian racially and geographically. The Italian navy and army will be used primarily for that purpose, and only incidentally in the general interests of the Allies. Italy's navy, which in the event of war will be placed under supreme command of the Duke of the Abruzzi, a fine sailor and a gallant gentleman, consists of four of the most powerful Dreadnoughts now afloat, with two others almost ready for sea, and four more in various stages of construction; six pre-Dreadnought battleships, nine armoured cruisers, of which four are magnificent modern vessels of great speed, and twelve light cruisers. She has also a reasonably complete equipment of destroyers and submarines. No force that Austria can assemble in the Adriatic could stand against the Italian navy. All Austrian shipping would be swept up, and the Austrian Government, realizing this, has directed that Austrian ships now in Italian waters shall proceed at once to Trieste or Pola.

The army of Italy is not so efficient as the navy, but it is, nevertheless, a

GERMAN BATTLE FRONT SMASHED BY JOFFE

Sir John French sent a report to the War Office Tuesday which indicates that the Germans are attempting to drive the British out of Ypres. The prolonged struggle, which undoubtedly constitutes the chief offensive movement of the Germans on the western front, began on Thursday, April 22nd, when at least 80,000 men were launched against the French and Canadian lines at Langemarck. It was stated by German prisoners captured during the battle that preparations for the use of poisonous gases as part of the German plan of attack had been in progress for three weeks. Dutch correspondents for over a week prior to April 22nd had reported that ordinary traffic on the Belgian railway had been greatly hampered by the westward movement of troop trains. It was estimated that half a million fresh troops from the Rhenish provinces had been added to the army in Flanders and northern France.

Had the First rush at Langemarck succeeded the evacuation of Ypres might have become necessary. It failed because of the devotion and doggedness of the Canadian division in hanging on to a position that is warfare as staged in the books and the military colleges was untenable. The terrible cost of that heroic stand Canadians are still learning a the daily list of killed, missing and wounded comes in, but the self-sacrifice of the Canadians "saved the situation" in an even larger sense than Sir John French meant when he sent his despatch of April 24th praising the bravery of Canada's soldier. For twenty days since the opening of the German offensive Ypres and the ring of entrenched position around it have been under almost constant attack, but the Germans, in assault, which must have cost man thousands of lives, is no nearer success than it was upon the first day of the battle. Sir John French reported Tuesday that on Monday afternoon "the Germans made another attack east of Ypres near the Menin road. Although they subjected our trenches to heavy bombardment and made their infantry advance under cover of clouds of poisonous gas, the attack failed. During the attack our sharpshooters inflicted very heavy casualties on the enemy while they advanced in mass formation literally mowing them down."

The Germans are slow to admit failure, but it is evident that their poison campaign against Ypres has failed. As in the battle of the Yser last fall, the losses of the enemy must be very great. Massed formations affords a target for artillery that the British gunners all through the war have quickly taken the advantage of. It is not improbable that the Germans have lost a hun-

in various stages of construction; six pre-Dreadnought battleships, nine armoured cruisers, of which four are magnificent modern vessels of great speed, and twelve light cruisers. She has also a reasonably complete equipment of destroyers, and submarines. No force that Austria can assemble in the Adriatic could stand against the Italian navy. All Austrian shipping would be swept up, and the Austrian Government, realizing this, has directed that Austrian ships now in Italian waters shall proceed at once to Trieste or Pola.

The army of Italy is not so efficient as the navy, but it is, nevertheless, a formidable fighting force. Many men were called to the colors to serve in the recent war against Turkey, and the campaign in Tripoli made veterans of them. The peace strength of Italy's army is about a million men. There are probably a little over a million trained soldiers among the Italian male population, while the total number liable for service on a war footing is almost three and a quarter millions. It is believed that Italy has about 600,000 men on the Austrian frontier at the present time. Her first offensive movement would be an attack by land and water upon Trieste.

The total number of prisoners made by the French since Sunday has reached 4000 the French War Office announced in their report of the battle now raging to the north of Arras. The French attack was checked in the vicinity of Loos, where the Germans, by a violent counter-attack, recaptured some of their lost trenches, but everywhere else French arms were victorious. The German counter-assault upon Neuville St. Vaast resulted in heavy losses. In the cemetery there, which was the centre of the fighting, more than 200 bodies of Germans were left behind, and 100 prisoners were taken. The entire German force engaged in the defense of Carency may be cut off. In the nearby wood and in the village itself 525 men were captured. Three successive lines of trenches have been carried, and by their advance into the wood the French now threaten the last line of communication between Carency and the German reserves.

The general effect of this French offensive movement along the front between Arras and the point near La Bassée, where the British lines are reached, has been to shatter the German defence and drive wedges through at various points, which may compel the enemy to re-form his line a considerable distance in the rear of his present position. That General Joffre is trying to hustle the Germans out of Lille is absolutely certain. The strong and long-continued German attack around Ypres has hitherto prevented Sir John French from co-operating with the French in this forward movement. When the British advance on this part of the front begins it will be launched from Armentieres or Laventie. The whole countryside near Lille is dotted with houses that afford countless opportunities for defence, and especially for the utilization of machine guns, in which the Germans are adepts.

The Russians are coming back. Not yet along the Wisloka, but on the ridges of the eastern Carpathians. In Bukowina, too, they have had a notable success, capturing 5000 prisoners in an action near Czernowitz. The German advance in western Galicia slackens, and it would seem, that Von Mackensen, like Von Hindenberg after the battle of the Mazurian Lakes, finds his army too exhausted to reap the fruits of the victory. The Germans are only 30 miles from Przemyel, but their offence is almost at an end.

A cable to the Daily Telegraph and Globe from Mitylene says that the under cover of clouds of poison gas, the attack failed. During attack our sharpshooters inflicted heavy casualties on the enemy who advanced in mass formation literally mowing them down."

The Germans are slow to admit failure, but it is evident that poison campaign against Ypres failed. As in the battle of the Y last fall, the losses of the enemy must be very great. Massed for action affords a target for artillery that the British gunners all through the war have quickly taken the advantage of. It is not improbable that the Germans have lost a hundred thousand men in killed and wounded around Ypres during past twenty days. The loss of 6,000 by the Canadians in two days was exceptionally heavy, but it indicates how terrible has been the struggle that is now drawing to an end. A week will probably see an end to the German attacks upon Ypres, and the removal of the gas works, some other part of the front which a better prospect offers of breaking through. Recent German activity near the Belgian seacoast at Newport seems to indicate that the undulations there may not prevent the enemy from trying to break through towards Furnes. The Belgians, who hold this part of the lines of the Allies, are fighting manfully. They succeeded in throwing a bridge-head over the Yser the east bank, near Dixmude, the other day. Their position was subjected to a vigorous attack, but it repulsed the Germans with heavy losses.

The counter-offensive of the allies the region between Armentieres and Arras has been more distinctly successful than the German assault upon Ypres. The British have not gained much ground because they are confronted by the strong defences throughout Lille, but farther south in the region between Arras and Lens, the French have been gaining territory steadily for three days. Tuesday fighting in this quarter was of a desperate nature. The French in front of Loos captured an important wood and a series of German trenches along the road from Loos to Vermelles. Notre Dame de Lorette the big block house and the chapel was carried in assault. Of this position the French official report says: "It has been ardently defended for months by the Germans, who have turned it into a veritable fortress. It was surrounded and taken by our troops late afternoon." The enemy was driven out of all his trenches to the south of the chapel of Lorette, and in the process were found several hundred dead bodies. At Carency the Germans are in a tight corner, and their lines of communications are in danger of being cut by the French, who already occupy several blocks of houses in the village.

These French gains along a front some ten miles are regarded in Paris as the finest success for the Allies since the battle of the Marne. Trampling up of the German line considered not only a striking triumph in tactics, but as indicative of the superior morale of the French troops.

Turkish forces on the Gallipoli Peninsula are being forced back toward the sea, and that the British bombardment of the narrow neck of land near Bulair, at the extreme north of the Peninsula, is preventing reinforcements from reaching the Turk. The opinion of a French officer, quoted to the effect that the Peninsula will be cleared of Turks as fast as the Bulair lines within a month. This would, of course, open the way to Constantinople for the fleet of the Allies.

Describing the capture of a line of trenches in the north, a British non-commissioned officer writes home of an unusual piece of strategy:

The 126th infantry which had planned a raid on the enemy's trenches, only 20 yards away, found its project compromised, but a corporal was struck by a brilliant idea; every man pulled his shirt on over jacket and vest; thus they crept through the snow up to the edge of the German trenches without being seen and carried the entire line."

DO PROUD TO FIGHT

President Wilson Shows Attitude in Speech at Philadelphia.

Indicates That While the United States Will Remain at Peace She Will Use Every Means to Convince Germany of Injustice of Lusitania Outrage.—The Feeling Throughout U. S. Is Rising.

PHILADELPHIA, May 11.—President Wilson gave to a gathering of 60 naturalized Americans last night the first intimation of the course which the United States Government probably will pursue in the action resulting from the loss of more than a hundred American lives on the British liner Lusitania. He spoke by implication, but his hearers interpreted his remarks as meaning that, while the United States would remain at peace, it would seek to convince Germany of the injustice to mankind of the tragedy of last Friday.

"America," said the President, "must have the consciousness that on its sides it touches elbows, and touches hearts, with all the nations mankind. The example of America must be a special example. And this is an example not merely of peace, because it will not fight, but because peace is a healing and elevating influence of the world, and strife not."

"There is such a thing as a man being too proud to fight. There is such a thing as being so right that one does not need to convince others of the force that it is right."

The President made no direct reference to the Lusitania tragedy, but his audience did not hesitate to read the application of the statement. The President pointed out the true goal of right American citizenship to be loyalty, not to the country of one's birth, but to the land of one's adoption.

"While you bring," he said, "all your energies to you, you come with a purpose of leaving all other concerns behind you—bringing what is best of their spirit, but not looking for your shoulder, or seeking to persuade what you leave in them. I would not certainly be one who would suggest that a man cease to be the place of his origin. It is one thing to love the place where you were born and another thing to dedicate yourself to the place where you are."

You can't be Americans if you think of yourselves in groups. America does not consist of groups. A man who considers himself as belonging to a national group is not an American.

"My advice to you is to think first, not only of America, but to think of humanity, and you do not lose humanity if you seek to divide humanity in jealous camps."

Until all the official reports are received from Ambassadors Gerard in Page at Berlin and London respectively, it is not expected that any action will be taken by the United States regarding the Lusitania outrage.

HAMMERING AT LINES.

British Hold New Positions East of Ypres—Gains Near Arras.

NORTHERN FRANCE, May 11.—Sunday and Monday fierce fighting took place between the sea and the Scarpe.

It opened yesterday with a furious German bombardment of the British lines to the eastward of Ypres, followed by German infantry attacks, which lasted throughout the day and night of Saturday, and led to several hand-to-hand encounters.

Owing to the superiority of German numbers and guns on this part of the field, the British had a difficult task, but to-day, thanks to reinforcement of the line and pressure brought to bear elsewhere, they have once more firmly established themselves on fresh lines to the east of Ypres. The German attacks, which have cost them heavy tolls in casualties, have died down.

The success of the allies to the north of Arras proves to have been more important than yesterday's despatches indicated.

The magnitude of the success, in these days of trench fighting, in which the advance of a few hundred yards is triumphant, proclaimed in Berlin, is indicated in the statement that the trenches captured were more than four miles long and in some places covered territory of two and one-half miles in width. The number of prisoners taken—more than 2,000—also indicates an engagement of considerable importance.

PRISONERS MURDERED.

Dutch Newspapermen Swear to Atrocities on Part of Germans.

LONDON, May 11.—The Press Bureau has given out a Foreign Office statement enclosing sworn statements from two Dutch newspapermen in which the charge is made that British prisoners of war were shot by German troops. The documents comprise statements alleged to have been made to the newspaper men by two German deserters to the effect that the Bavarian regiments were ordered by Prince Rupprecht to take no British prisoners under pain of severe punishment. All had to be shot, the deserters said.

One case is instanced in which it is alleged that 40 British prisoners were burned alive in a hangar, the Germans concerned receiving a medal. Another instance deals with 24 British prisoners alleged to have been shot against a wall at Warwick.

The German deserters who are said to have been responsible for these stories disappeared mysteriously following a visit to the German Consul.

Austrian Drive in Galicia Has Very Slight Effect.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Col. Golejewski, military attaché to the Russian Embassy here, issued the following statement last night:

"During the last week of April very considerable Austro-German forces assumed the offensive between the Vistula and the East Beskid range of the Carpathians."

"Supported by considerable heavy artillery, the Austro-Germans, after a stubborn resistance by our troops on the second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth days of May, succeeded in crossing the River Dunajec and in establishing themselves between the latter and the River Wisloka."

MURDERED BY KAISER

Emperor Charged With Death of Lusitania Victims.

Coroner's Jury at Kinsale Declares That Crime Was Contrary to Conventions of Civilized World—Death Will Number 1,134—Bodies Are Laid to Rest in Little Cemetery at Queenstown, Ireland

LONDON, May 11.—The verdict rendered by the Coroner's jury at Kinsale, Ireland, which investigated the deaths resulting from the torpedoing of the Lusitania follows:

"We find that the deceased met death from prolonged immersion and exhaustion in the sea, eight miles southwest of Old Head of Kinsale, on Friday, May 7, 1915, owing to the sinking of the Lusitania by torpedoes fired by a German submarine."

"We find that this appalling crime was committed contrary to international law and the conventions of all civilized nations."

"We also charge the officers of said submarine, and the Emperor and Government of Germany, under whose orders they acted, with the crime of wholesale murder before the tribunal of the civilized world."

"We desire to express sincere condolences and sympathy with the relatives of the deceased, the Cunard Line and the United States, many of whose citizens perished in this murderous attack on an unarmed liner."

This verdict was returned yesterday by the Coroner's jury which for two days has been holding an inquest over the bodies of five of the Lusitania's victims. The verdict was ordered by Coroner John Horgan after hearing the testimony of survivors and of W. T. Turner, captain of the Lusitania.

The Cunard Co. last night made the following official announcement: "The number of passengers aboard the Lusitania was 1,255. The crew numbered 651. The survivors numbered 772. The death toll numbers 1,134. These figures are subject to slight variation."

In the quiet little cemetery which lies along a green, flower-decked hill between the harbor and the ancient Irish city of Queenstown, 140 victims of the Lusitania tragedy were yesterday laid to rest. Of these 76 had been identified. There were 64 whose relatives either had not been able to recognize their faces, swollen by the action of the water, or crushed by the impact of the torpedo, which literally blew the entire bottom out of the great liner, or who were strangers in a strange land. They were held to the very last, long after the arrival of the afternoon train, in the hope that relatives or friends might arrive and their identity be learned.

Queenstown, a city of mourning, left nothing undone to show its sympathy and sorrow. Each coffin was flag-decorated. On each was placed a bunch of flowers, a sprigging tribute of the women of Southern Ireland. A military escort was provided to the cemetery.

The pathetic feature of the funeral, which caused the strongest men to break down and sob, was the lorry that carried the baby victims of the great sea tragedy to their final resting place. The little frail caskets, tiny little things that one man might easily toss above his head, were tenderly carried out into the sunlight and placed one alongside another.

LIQUOR BILL ADVANCED.

Second Reading Given to Measure to Check Intemperance.

LONDON, May 11.—The House of Commons last evening passed the second reading of Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George's bill to amend the Defence of Realm Act. The bill originally was designed to place a heavy surtax on wines, spirits and beer, but under pressure from the Irish party its provisions were amended to giving the Government control of the sale of liquor in areas where munitions of war are being made.

Under the bill a central committee will be set up for Scotland and England. It will act on the recommendations of local committees of employers and workmen in the districts affected.

Mr. Lloyd George has promised to appoint a committee to inquire into the charges of drunkenness among workmen and all parties, including the Laborites, have expressed their satisfaction with the bill.

TURKS AGAIN DEFEATED.

sians Inflict Decisive Blow Near Oltu, in Armenia.

ETROGRAD, May 11.—A big victory has been won over the Turkish army near Oltu in Armenia by the Russian army of the Caucasus, the Turks being dislodged from their positions and driven back to the south.

This was the inspiring news given by the Russian war office last night on receipt of word of the success of the operations from the headquarters of the Russian army of the Caucasus. The Turks, the reports were driven in such hurried fashion as to force them to abandon a number of their tents and a large quantity of ammunition.

Russian army is also marching Tiflis, the capital of Persia, has been the Turks from the south of the Caucasus, and has occupied the neighboring villages. Tiflis, near which the more important successes were gained, is a town on the border of Russian and Turkish territory.

SAVED BY LIFE RAFT.

Allan of Montreal Spent Two Hours Afloat Before Rescue.

QUEENSTOWN, May 11.—Lady Allan of Montreal was one of 33 survivors who were buffeted about two hours on a life-raft before being picked up by the freighter Alma. The story was told by N. Allan of New York, who said: "I had struggled aboard a life-raft and about five minutes later we were picked up by the freighter Alma. I had been lying bravely to keep afloat and now ready to give up. We hauled her aboard and laid her down in the center of the raft. She remained here in a semi-conscious condition until we picked her up. What one of her two daughters I do know."

Cream Toast.

Toast six slices of bread till crisp brown, dip in hot, salted water, place in dish and pour over the following gravy: One pint of milk, let it scalding point; then stir in one large tablespoonful of flour mixed with a little cold water. Stir till thick, and add butter the size of an egg. When making cream toast, each cupful of milk allow a 1 tablespoonful of butter and 1 level tablespoonful of flour (add flour); melt butter, stir the flour and add a cupful of milk gradually, stirring all the time. Add a little salt and strain the dip over it.

Sir John French reports under date of Saturday May 8:

"Last night the enemy continued his attacks to the east of Ypres and made further attacks to-day, all of which were repulsed with heavy loss. Our line there is firmly established.

"This morning our first army attacked the enemy's line between the village of Grenier and Festubert and gained some ground to the south-east. Towards Fromelles the fighting continues."

Details of the fighting along the Carpathians come chiefly from the enemy headquarters. The latest news from Russia hints that the Austro-German drive is already showing signs of exhaustion. The Austrian report admits that the Austro-Hungarian advance has been halted in order to unite straggling units and bring up supplies.

IN HONOR OF OUTRAGE.

Children Get Holiday to Celebrate the Lusitania Massacre.

BERLIN, May 11.—The following official communication was issued Saturday night:

"The Cunard liner Lusitania was yesterday torpedoed by a German submarine and sank.

"The Lusitania was naturally armed with guns, as were recently most of the English mercantile steamers. Moreover, as is well known here, she had large quantities of war material in her cargo.

"Her owners, therefore, knew to what danger the passengers were exposed. They alone bear all the responsibility for what has happened.

"Germany, on her part left nothing undone to repeatedly and strongly warn them. The Imperial Ambassador in Washington even went so far as to make a public warning, so as to draw attention to this danger. The English press sneered then at the warning and relied on the protection of the British fleet to safeguard Atlantic traffic."

There were great rejoicings during yesterday in Southern Germany. Towns were beflagged, especially along the Rhine, and the children had a half-holiday in honor of the event.

bute of the women of Southern Ireland. A military escort was provided to the cemetery.

The pathetic feature of the funeral, which caused the strongest emotion to break down and sob, was the lorry that carried the baby victims of the great sea tragedy to their final resting place. The little frail caskets, tiny little things that one man might easily toss above his head, were tenderly carried out into the sunlight and placed one alongside another.

The survivors do not agree as to whether the submarine fired one or two torpedoes. A few say they saw the periscope, though many attest to tracing the wake of foam as a projectile came towards the vessel. The only point on which all concur is that the torpedo struck the vessel a vital blow amidships, causing her to list almost immediately to starboard. In this careening fashion she plowed forward some distance, smashing the lifeboats' davits as she did so, and making the launching of boats well-nigh impossible until headway had ceased.

How far the Lusitania struggled forward after being struck and how long it was before she disappeared beneath the waves, likewise, are points upon which few passengers agree, estimates of the time she remained afloat ranging from eight to twenty minutes. At any rate the list to starboard so elevated the lifeboats on the port side as soon to render them useless, and it is said only two on that side were launched.

After that several boats were launched successfully, but the steamer's list grew more perilous, the decks slanting to such an angle it was imperative for all to cling to the starboard rail. Many by this time had donned life-belts and jumped for it. Several lifeboats broke adrift unoccupied, and the sea became a froth of oars, chairs, debris and human bodies.

The Lusitania's cargo was valued at about three-quarters of a million dollars, and contained a large quantity of war supplies. Her manifest included 280,000 pounds of brass and copper wire, $66,000 worth of military goods, and 5,471 cases of ammunition, valued at $200,000, all of which was contraband of war. The ship itself, Cunard officials said today, was covered by $5,000,000 war risk insurance.

Before the Lusitania sailed from New York some nervousness was caused because of the publication in the papers of an advertisement warning intending travelers that a state of war existed between Germany and Great Britain and her allies; that the zone of war includes the water adjacent to the British Isles; that in accordance with notice given by the German Government vessels flying the flag of Great Britain are liable to destruction in those waters, and that travelers sailing in the war zone on ships of Great Britain or her allies do so at their own risk. This advertisement was signed, "Imperial German Embassy."

The Mystery of Galapagos.

Galapagos Islands, the suspected German naval base to which Great Britain invited the attention of the United States, is one of the most inexplicable island worlds of the Pacific. For as a separate world Darwin regarded it, having its own special creeping and crawling and flying beasts. "Both in space and time," said the great naturalist, "we seem in these islands to be brought near to that great fact—that mystery of mysteries—the first appearance of new beings on the earth." Apart from the giant tortoises and turtles the old Spanish buccaneers sent the fame of the Galapagos archipelago round the world.

"That is your own fault. I'll venture to say. You lack energy. You didn't throw yourself into your work when you did have it."

"I wouldn't like to have done. Nor would you, sir."

"Oh, I wouldn't, eh? Why not?"

"Because I was a grave-digger."

Dumas' Dramatic Intuition.

A story is told of the elder Dumas which illustrates his remarkable dramatic intuition. An eminent Parisian critic who sat beside him at a first performance noticed that he seemed abstracted.

"You are triste, my master," observed the critic.

"No," replied Dumas, "I'm not bored, but I'm somewhere else than here, so to speak. I am unable to follow any play to the end. I listen closely to the first act, and then my mind carries me off into thoughts of the play I would make of it."

No Election Wanted Until After War

There is no doubt now that the supreme insult is to be inflicted—a general election at a time when the country is filled with farewells to the dying and mournings for the dead. Casualty lists are being scanned each day with a view to the residuary benefits to the party in power.

For some time one solitary newspaper has been beating the tom-tom, but last week W. F. McLean, M. P., visited the capital and had an interview with the Honorable Robert Rogers. A couple of days later the Toronto World started whanging the drum—but only on trial. The announcement of a general election on June 28th was sprung in the last edition of the Sunday World, which is issued on Saturday night, and the war extra next morning, but was not followed up in the Monday paper which is a more responsible sheet. W. F. puts most of his best efforts of fiction over in the Sunday World and reserves the daily for soberer flights of fancy. As a reward for his missionary work in the Sunday World, W. F., who is catalogued as an Independent, will receive no Conservative opposition in South York. It must be admitted that he did his work handsomely, crediting the Government with a majority of seventy, which is about as high as any government can lift itself by its own bootstraps.

Of course the Mail published Premier Borden's disclaimer and revealed that statesman in a fine heroic roll, but the idea had been set afloat just the same. The premier tempered his denial with a statement that the subject would be definitely considered very soon. Meanwhile the country was expected to play its part of the game and get used to the idea of an early election somewhere near the date so subtly suggested by the member for South York. Alexander Pope tips the scheme off in his well known lines:

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet, seen too oft, familiar with her face
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

The hope is that everything Pope said about vice will apply in like measure to a general election brought on at a time when the public sense of decency resents it, by a government which has sixteen months to live if it cares to round out its full term. In a word, to avoid a lingering death, the Government is willing to risk premature burial. It is on the cards, for example, that the soldiers' votes may be a painful surprise to the party in power, not to mention the outraged feelings of the people at large.

The same reasons which impelled the Government to prorogue Parliament impell it to dissolve Parliament and go to the country. The chief reason is that the scandals must not have time to sink in. The calculation is that people will forget the scandals amidst the roar of the cannon and the Government will be able to sneak in under cover of the noise. If the people are too busy with their own grief to do any voting, that will make it all the easier for the heebers, whose business it is, to deliver the goods at the right spot without danger of crowding. If the casualty lists are too horrifying around election day, they can be held back until the voting is over.

When Parliament prorogued, new victims were appearing in the Public

It was with a smile of relief that Dr. Reid promised that the Justice Department would take up the investigations where the Public Accounts Committee left off.

Since Parliament prorogued, the Justice Department had peeked into enough abysses to justify it in urging the Government to do it now. Everywhere it looked was a mess. Even a brave soul like Arthur Meighen viewed it with alarm and shook his fist at the Yankees to draw off attention. Whether it is a matter of following up clues or punishing offenders, the Justice Department will go more comfortably about it if their friends are sustained. Scandals pop up over night, like mushrooms, which is a serious matter for a Government that has cleansed its soul by reading two members out of the party. The Government was so anxious to have the last words on scandals that it went back ten years to find Frank Oliver, but only succeeded in digging up an empty grave.

For as much as a week, Premier Borden figured as a hero. The short way he took with Garland and Foster was the admiration of many Conservative newspapers. Those who knew him best wondered who was acting as his backbone for the time being. The story goes that it was Frank Cochrane who pushed him at it not so much because it was the right thing to do as because it was good business. Honestly, so to speak, is the best policy when there's nothing else in sight. So with some pulling in front and more pushing behind, Premier Borden was lifted to his niche and spoke the grand words which put the kibosh on two of his party followers. Unfortunately the Premier did not stay up there among the statues and the stained glass very long. It was W. F. Garland that made the snatch at his halo. Him to be read out of the party by Sir Robert Borden! Not much! He'd see what Carleton County said about it! Carleton County at this writing is not what you might call enthusiastic about Garland's expulsion. It looks too much like banning with bell, book and candle to suit good Orangemen and the chances are that Garland will get the nomination again.

Carleton County is not one of those fair weather friends that stick by a man when he is right. It answers a sterner test—it sticks by a friend when he is wrong and to hell with the expense. What's a little matter like $9,000 overcharges to break up a life-long companionship. In short, so far has public opinion in Carleton County reacted that Mr. Garland may get not only his nomination but also his money back. When Carleton County sets out to vindicate a friend's honor, it makes a thorough job of it. Meanwhile Mr. Garland's conduct echoes from sea to sea and at least discounts Premier Borden's status-quo attitude. With Garland's success in mind, it will not be like a young man of spirit, such as Arthur De Witt Foster is, to take his misfortunes lying down.

To scandals waxing and pestering the Honorable Bob Rogers, as Minister of Elections, adds his own peck of troubles—Manitoba tottering, British Columbia on the ragged edge, Quebec slipping away, Ontario grumbling, the war taxes coming home to roost, the C.N.R. Government, and other practical matters like that. Meanwhile the cost of living in Canada heeps pace with the cost of dying in Flanders and there's nothing to offset it except an unfinished report on food prices which Mr. Crothers says is the best report in the world once it gets printed. The gist of the report is that Canada is no worse off than any other country which might Incidentally Premier Hearst and the Government are sorry that Dr. Carman took up his pen again.

Read what Dr. Carman says in this letter:—

"Canada hands this liquor business over to the Methodists. All right, if partisan Methodists always voted straight. But for a great public measure like this there are Presbyterians, Anglicans and other voters as well. Why not divide up the responsibility and the measureless honour? I do not favour this Methodist monopoly of all the glory."

Mr. Hearst and the Government must be disappointed. When they put four Methodists on a Board consisting of a total of five men they evidently were making a deliberate bid for the support of the Methodist Church. It is now apparent, however, that this church does not take kindly to being shouldered with the responsibility for the continuance of the bar in Ontario.

The Toronto Star, commenting on the letter, says that if the Government by their appointing such an overwhelming majority of Methodists thought this was politics it was decidedly amateurish on their part. "The condition of mind," it says, "of anybody who thought that he could achieve some political end by identifying Methodism with the regulation of the liquor traffic would certainly be a curious psychological study."

WOMEN AND THE WAR

Mr. Rowell, in a speech to the Canadian Business Women's Club in Toronto, paid deep tributes to the women of the country who have borne their share of the burdens of the war, the wives and mothers of those who have been killed at the front, those who have gone as nurses and those who have been unceasing in their efforts to provide clothing and comforts for the soldiers, to furnish the Red Cross with necessary supplies, to assist in the equipment of our military hospitals, to support all movements for the relief of distress among war-stricken peoples and to care for the wives and families of those who have gone to the front.

"Upon our women," said Mr. Rowell, "the spirit of Florence Nightingale has descended. In the heroic courage of the mothers of our people we have the proof of the strength and vitality of our race."

SOME DIFFERENCES.

Here and there amongst our dairymen are such splendid results attained that one can only be astonished at the complacency with which other so-called dairymen continue to be content with the pitifully small average yields of milk per cow. Why do the huge differences exist? Just a few miles from here is one of those poor herds, six cows with an average of only 3,338 pounds of milk; the highest yield only 4,000 pounds.

In contrast to that, two good herds in Western Ontario indicate the possibilities for the man whose eyes are open to what milk records have to teach. One herd of 12 grades average 10,677 pounds of milk and 317 pounds of fat; the second herd of 22 grades averaged 10,542 pounds of milk and 350 pounds of fat.

These marvellous differences in herd yields drive home hard facts. Men differ in their methods of feeding and handling cows, feeds differ in value, cows differ considerably in their inherent capacity as milk producers; they are not all cast in the same mould.

In the above two good herds the constant use of milk records has proved an excellent lever in raising the production. Cow testing pays.

WHY WE CAN'T F

The Reason Man Is Unable to
In the Air Like a Bird.

HE LACKS THE BREASTB

In the Bird It is Very Massive Developed Like the Keel of a V and Therein Lies the Secret Enormous Wing Power.

Man has always longed to fly like a bird, and all the ancient attempts were based upon the flapping wings attached to human arms.

These efforts were given up long when it was realized that man not and could not be strong enough to sustain himself in the air by the use of his arms. A man can only justify himself with his arms—chinning bar, for example—but he finds himself pretty heavy after he has done few times.

The reason why no man will ever be able to fly with self moved wings is that his breastbone is not big enough. A bird's breastbone has along its side a deep keel, from which spring enormous muscles that draw down wings when flapping or hold them when soaring, the muscles, in words, that support the entire weight of the bird.

The most powerful fliers have the deepest breastbones. Look at the skeleton of an albatross, a condor, a hummingbird in a museum and you will notice that the keel of its breastbone projects like the keel of a yacht.

You can see this keel, only smaller in proportion to the size of the bird, on the carcass of any chicken or turkey after the meat has been removed, and the tender white flesh of the breast is nothing but the muscle with which the bird flew when a

You notice that even on a chicken which is one of the weakest of all flesh forms the greater part of its body. On a hummingbird there is else but this mass of flying muscle. In other words, the hummingbird is nothing but a tiny flying machine.

An albatross has a vast spread of wings, and its small body is little but a pair of powerful pectoral muscles. These are attached by tendons to the bone called the humerus, which is the counterpart of the upper bone of a man. They spread out like a solid fan and are fastened to the breastbone with its deep keel, the clavicles, or "wishbone," and the ribs.

A man's breastbone has no keel, the humerus, or upper arm bone, is hinged to the clavicle, or collarbone, shoulder blade. His pectoral muscles, which move the arm forward, are attached to it by strong tendons and are inserted in the ribs and collarbone.

These are the muscles that do the same work for man as the pectoral muscles do for a bird. These are the muscles on which he would have to rely if he were to fasten wings to his arms and try to fly.

Compare these muscles with those of an albatross and you will see how inadequate they are. Though an

to the country. The chief reason is that the scandals must not have time to sink in. The calculation is that people will forget the scandals amidst the roar of the cannon and the Government will be able to sneak in under cover of the noise. If the people are too busy with their own grief to do any voting, that will make it all the easier for the heeled, whose business it is, to deliver the goods at the right spot without danger of crowding. If the casualty lists are too horrifying around election day, they can be held back until the voting is over.

When Parliament prorogued, new vistas were opening up before the Public Accounts Committee. Mr. Carvell had his pockets full of clues volunteered by good citizens from all over Canada. There were clues enough to occupy the Public Accounts Committee all summer and then some. If the suspicions of responsible Canadians from Vancouver to Halifax were correct, everything the Government touched in the way of army supplies was a scandal. Although the committee had only sat six weeks, it had bagged two members of Parliament, and was looking straight at a few others. If it had gone on another week, it threatened to uncover a senatorial candidate. It was at this juncture that a dead hand reached out from the grave and rescued the Government. The rule laid down by Bourinot that committees stop when Parliament stops, saved the situation.

scandals waning and prestige waning the Honorable Bob Rogers, as Minister of Elections, adds his own peck of troubles—Manitoba tottering, British Columbia on the ragged edge, Quebec slipping away, Ontario grumbling, the war taxes coming home to roost, the C.N.R. Government, and other practical matters like that. Meanwhile the cost of living in Canada heeps pace with the cost of dying in Flanders and there's nothing to offset it except an unfinished report on food prices which Mr. Crothers says is the best report in the world once it gets printed. The gist of the report is that Canada is no worse off than any other country which might have to stand for a 75 per cent. increase in prices at a time when people can least afford it.

All of which helps to explain why it's a hurry-up order with Bob Rogers and also why the Government is inclined to agree with him as a man who keeps his ear to the ground.

DR. CARMAN WRITES

Writing as a fine art, is not dead. Some pessimists thought it was but Dr. Carman, the famous veteran leader of the Methodist Church in Canada, although over eighty years of age, has disproved the theory. He has written to the press one of the cleverest and most searching letters which have appeared for a long time.

ENGLAND AS AN ISLAND.

Changes a Channel Tunnel and Perfect Aviation Would Bring.

Great Britain is an island. Unless there is some great convulsion of nature to all time the strait of Dover will separate it from the continent of Europe. Yet every now and then a renewal of the scheme for a channel tunnel is heard, and at this moment men are dying from England to France and France to England.

Suppose the channel tunnel to be made; suppose flying to be improved—and it is improving every day—what will become of the island? What will become of the sea? They will be there and will be shown on the map, but to all human intents and purposes the geography will be changed. The sea will no longer be a barrier; it will no longer be the only highroad from England to France. There will be going to and from on or in dry land and going to and fro neither on land nor sea. Suppose this science of aviation to make great strides and heavy loads to be carried in the air, what will become of the ports, and what will become of the seagoing peoples?

The ports will be there, appearing as now on the map, but Birmingham goods will be shipped at Birmingham for foreign parts, and Lithgow will export mineral direct, saying goodbye to the Blue mountain and even to Sydney harbor.—Sir Charles P. Lucas in Science.

EAR DRUMS AND DROWNING.

Why Good Swimmers May Meet Sudden Death in the Water.

Sudden death of swimmers has never been explained satisfactorily, but it is generally assumed that it is due to cramps that affect the respiratory muscles. The Medical Record says there is another theory that "has never received the attention which it merits." This is that cold water penetrating the ear sets up an irritation in the delicate passages of the inner ear. It cites an address delivered by Dr. Guettich before the Berlin Otological society, in which he revived this theory.

The irritation of the labyrinth of the inner ear by cold water might cause sudden paralysis, just as a shock to it through a sharp blow on the chin will cause a "knockout." The symptoms of the swimmer and the fighter are similar. They can make motions, but cannot direct them; they may become temporarily unconscious. In the case of the swimmer, of course, drowning follows unless some one helps him.

The Medical Record says that persons with perforated ear drums are those chiefly menaced by this accident, although it may occur to others. And this in spite of the fact that children with large perforations of the ear drum often swim and dive with impunity.

to the clavicle, or collarbone, as shoulder blade. His pectoral muscle which move the arm forward, and d toid muscles, which lift it, are attached to it by strong tendons and spread fanlike over his upper chest, being inserted in the ribs and collarbone.

These are the muscles that do the same work for man as the pectoral muscles do for a bird. These are the muscles on which he would have rely if he were to fasten wings to his arms and try to fly.

Compare these muscles with those an albatross and you will see how adequate they are. Though an albatross weighs only a few pounds, its pectoral muscles that are actually larger than those of the most powerful athlete.

In order to have muscles powerful enough to lift his weight in the air flapping wings a man's breastbone would have to develop a keel like bird's and his collar bone would have to be changed to a giant "wishbone."

Some writer on aviation has calculated that this keel and "wishbone" would have to project at least six feet in order to furnish attachment for the necessary muscles, for man in proportion to his size is far heavier than an albatross. This bird has small, very light legs, whereas man's legs are solid and heavy. The albatross' wing bones are hollow tubes.

This makes it plain why experimenters in flying long ago gave up the idea of self moved wings and flight like that of a bird.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Trouble With Golf.

Queen Victoria once induced Count Shuvalov, the Russian ambassador, try a game of golf at Balmoral. The Russian did try, but after innumerable misses he turned round to one of the bystanders and said:

"Ach, monsieur, it would be a very nice game if the ball was ten times larger. Now let us go home."

But what he said in Russian to his self is not recorded.

WHY WE CAN'T FLY

the Reason Man Is Unable to Rise
In the Air Like a Bird.

E LACKS THE BREASTBONE.

the Bird It Is Very Massive and Developed Like the Keel of a Yacht, and Therein Lies the Secret of Its Enormous Wing Power.

Man has always longed to fly like a rd, and all the ancient attempts at ght were based upon the flapping of ings attached to human arms.

These efforts were given up long ago hen it was realized that man was t and could not be strong enough to stain himself in the air by the use of s arms. A man can only just lift self with his arms—chinning the r, for example—but he finds himself etty heavy after he has done it a w times.

The reason why no man will ever be le to fly with self moved wings is at his breastbone is not big enough.
bird's breastbone has along its mid-e a deep keel, from which spring the ormous muscles that draw down the ings when flapping or hold them level hen soaring, the muscles, in other ords, that support the entire weight
the bird.

The most powerful fliers have the epest breastbones. Look at the skelon of an albatross, a condor or a mming bird in a museum and you ll notice that the keel of its breast-ne projects like the keel of a racing cht.

You can see this keel, only much aller in proportion to the size of the rd, on the carcass of any chicken or rkey after the meat has been re-oved, and the tender white flesh from e breast is nothing but the muscles ith which the bird flew when alive.
You notice that even on a chicken,
hich is one of the weakest of fliers,
s flesh forms the greater part of the
dy. On a humming bird there is lit-else but this mass of flying muscle.

Other words, the humming bird is thing but a tiny flying machine.
An albatross has a vast spread of ings, and its small body is little else
t a pair of powerful pectoral mus-
s. These are attached by tendons the bone called the humerus, which the counterpart of the upper arm ne of a man. They spread out like a lid fan and are fastened to the eastbone with its deep keel, to the ivicles, or "wishbone," and to the as.

A man's breastbone has no keel. His merus, or upper arm bone, is hinged the clavicle, or collarbone, and oulder blade. His pectoral muscles, hich move the arm forward, and deloid muscles, which lift it, are attached to it by strong tendons and spread nlike over his upper chest, being inted in the ribs and collarbone.

These are the muscles that do the me work for man as the pectoral uscles do for a bird. These are the uscles on which he would have to ly if he were to fasten wings to his ms and try to fly.

Compare these muscles with those of an albatross and you will see how in-

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, May 10.—False rumors that some harm had come to President Wilson put sudden additional strain today on the wheat market, while values were tending downward owing to continued uncertainty as to whether the Lusitania tragedy would involve serious disturbance of diplomatic and trade relations. The market closed unsettled, but with the greater part of the losses overcome at ½c to 1½c under Saturday night's level.
Corn finished ½c off to ¾c up, oats 1½c down to ¾c advance, and provisions showing 5c to 20c decline.

Corn received good support, and at no time manifested heaviness equal to that in wheat. On the temporary decline that did take place shorts covered freely. Receipts were light, and Argentine reports bullish.

Oats followed other grains, but failed to rally as well as corn. Stocks appeared heavy and the weather was on the side of the bears.

Sympathy with the decline of cereals carried down provisions, but packers' buying was turning the market upward again at the close. Higher prices for hogs seemed for a while to have been completely lost sight of.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, May 10.—The good crop prospects generally caused a weak opening on the local market. Futures opened ½c to ¾c lower, after which there was a temporary rally on short covering.
This was short-lived and before noon
May touched $1.56½, July $1.52½, and October $1.19½, or 2c to 2½c under Saturday's close.

May oats opened ½c lower and July ¾c down. Flax opened unchanged to ½c higher, and eased off later.

There was no trading to speak of in cash. Barley was steady and flax quiet.
Inspections 150 cars, against 316 last year. In sight today 225 cars.

Futures—Wheat closed ¾c to 1½c lower, oats ¾c to ¾c down, and flax ¾c to

TORONTO, May 10.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were lambs and 366 calves.

The bulk of the sales of steers and heifers were made between $8 and $8.40, with several loads at $8.50. Read the sales and quotations given by the several commission salesmen.

Stockers and feeders also were in demand at cattle values, in sympathy with the fat cattle.

Milkers and springers were firm, but

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE IS IT SCRIPTURAL?

"The Wages of Sin Is Death"—
"Soul That Sinneth Shall Die."

Sickness and Death Abnormal Conditions — Healing a Restitution
Work — Church Differentiated
From the World — God Omnipotent and Omniscient, But Not Omnipresent—"God Is a Spirit."

PASTOR RUSSELL

New York City,
May 2. — Pastor
Russell's discourse
at the New York
City Temple to-day was a continuation of his masterly address of last week.
His text was,
"There shall be no
more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." — Revelation 21:4.

The speaker
briefly referred to last week's discourse, and said that having, he believed, fairly stated the facts and claims of Christian Science, he would now inquire whether or not its teachings are Scriptural. He holds that Christian Science is in conflict with the Bible. The Scriptures distinctly aver that God created man perfect—in His own image and likeness, morally, intellectually, and that Adam's disobedience was sin, punishable with death. Christian Science denies this, declaring that there is no death.

"Mother Eddy," striving after a truth, taught there is no pain, no sickness, no sorrow, etc. The truth after which she was feeling, but did not fully grasp, is that sin, sickness, sorrow, death, are abnormal conditions—the result of the curse which came upon our race in the beginning.
He agreed with Mrs. Eddy that sin, sickness, sorrow, death, are not designed by God to be everlasting conditions. The Bible assures us that the result of Messiah's great work of Redemption will be the obliteration of these.—Revelation 22:3.

When Christian Science healers speak of healing, they necessarily acknowledge that sickness exists.
But sickness, sorrow and pain are not proper for God's people, and their prevalence now attests that God is dealing with the world as criminals under death sentence. The Church of Christ is no exception in this matter. Jesus, "holy, harmless, undefined, separate from sinners," was weary, hungry. He agonized in the Garden; He died on the Cross. Nor were these errors; they were the very things for which He came into the world, as He declared. Without His suffering as our Redeemer, Adam and his race could not be recovered. The Church is invited to "suffer with Him," to be "dead with Him," thus to share in His resurrection to the Divine nature. Consequently the Church should not expect Divine Healing.

Healing a Restitution Work.

The speaker then demonstrated conclusively from Scripture that healing is Restitution work, and will be practiced in the world during the Messianic Kingdom. Restitution is not promised to the Church, but a new nature, the Divine, obtainable

ASTRAKHAN SKINS.

Treatment They Undergo Before They Are Packed for Market.

The big nomad tribes, the Kash-gal and Arabs, bring immense flocks of sheep each spring and autumn to the Shiraz market. The Russian dealers pay large sums in advance to obtain everything from the chieftains, who often deliver as many as 40,000 to 50,000 skins at one time. Before these lamb skins are ready to be packed in bales they undergo a very careful and lengthy preparation to preserve them. All leave Persia in a salted state, the final tanning being done in Europe.

The preliminary cleaning of the lambskin or astrakhan is done in running water to get rid of impurities on the fleshy side of the skins, which are scraped with long, blunt edged knives. Then follows the salt-ing, which is done in large tanks or earthen vessels capable of holding 300 to 500 skins each. The skins remain in pickle some ten to fourteen days and are then taken out one by one and spread on a table, where they are once more carefully examined and scraped.

This finished, they are spread out in the sun to dry for twelve hours or so, by which time they are bone dry, but very dirty, for flour, salt and water have formed a paste, and the fine curls are all stuck together and

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, May 10.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, prices showed an advance, and a stronger feeling prevailed throughout the day. Receipts were rather light, and, owing to the small number of good to choice steers for sale, packers turned their attention to other sources. A number of carload lots were purchased in the Toronto market. There was a good demand here, and an active trade was done, with sales of full loads of choice steers at $8.50, good at $8, and smaller lots brought 25c per hundred pounds more. Sales of small lots of choice bulls were made as high as $8, and choice butchers' cows at $7.50 to $7.75 per cwt. Common, mixed cattle brought $5.50.

Owing to the continued scarcity of sheep, the tone of the market is very strong, and prices have scored another sharp advance, with a good demand, and sales of small lots were made at $7.50 to $8.25 each. Spring lambs sold at from $7 to $9.

A strong feeling developed in the market for hogs today, and prices advanced 25c per cwt., owing to the higher prices at Toronto last week, and the smaller supplies coming forward. Selected lots sold at $9.50 to $9.75, sows at $7.50 to $7.75, and stags at $4.75 to $4.85 per cwt., weighed off cars.

PARIS, May 11.—The first attack of the war on Constantinople is reported in an unofficial despatch from Athens. It is said three Russian aviators flew over the city, dropping several bombs, which are believed to have caused extensive damage.

The message says also that the Russian Black Sea fleet bombarded the Turkish forts on the left bank of the Bosphorus on Wednesday. Several Russian shells fell within about ten miles of Constantinople.

Another Liner Sails.

NEW YORK, May 11.—The British steamer Transylvania of the Anchor Line sailed late Saturday for Liverpool, a few hours after news of the Lusitania's sinking had been received. The Transylvania's cabins were crowded, her agents said. There were 879 passengers aboard, and others who wanted to go, according to the line, could not be accommodated for lack of room.

his race could not be recovered. The Church is invited to "suffer with Him," to be "dead with Him," thus to share in His resurrection to the Divine nature. Consequently the Church should not expect Divine Healing.

Healing a Restitution Work.

The speaker then demonstrated conclusively from Scripture that healing is Restitution work, and will be practiced in the world during the Messianic Kingdom. Restitution is not promised to the Church, but a new nature—the Divine—obtainable only by participation with the Redeemer in the "sufferings of this present time." (Romans 8:18.) Neither Jesus nor His Apostles experienced healing—nor did any of the early Church, so far as the record shows. Nor was this because none of them were sick. Jesus Himself was very sick in Gethsemane, and fainted on the way to the Cross. St. Timothy had dyspepsia; but, instead of healing him, St. Paul wrote to him advising a certain diet. Miracles of healing were the exception, and were for convincing the people that the Church had the Divine approval.

While the Pastor commended Christian Scientists for their endeavors to hold fast to the Bible, he reminded them that not the letter of the Bible will enlighten and sanctify, but its spirit, its real meaning. This is obtainable, not by confusing definitions, but by accepting in simplicity of mind the words for what they are, and putting them together in logical order. That things are not in right condition any one can see; and they will not be right until the Redeemer shall assume His kingly office and remove the curse. As a result of His work, at the close of the Millennial Age there will be no sin, no death, no sorrow, no pain.

But since Christian Science fails to recognize and state clearly these facts, it follows that the cult is not Scriptural; and however attractive its teachings may be to some, they cannot be relied upon, because they are off the true foundation—recognizing neither the facts of sin and death nor the necessity for redemption from these conditions by Jesus sacrifice of Himself. Furthermore, Christian Science does not see the difference between the Church of Christ, in process of selection for more than eighteen centuries, and the world, which will not be dealt with until the Church is glorified, and with her Lord constitutes the Kingdom of Righteousness.

The remainder of the discourse was devoted to the Scriptural teaching in respect to God. Nothing in the Bible declares that God is omnipresent—present in everything and place. Whoever thinks of Him thus necessarily thinks of Him as impersonal. "God is a Spirit." (John 4:24; Hebrews 10:38.) The Scriptures set forth His Justice, Wisdom, Power and Love—qualities not attributable to a principle; for principles have no personality, and are not dependent upon circumstances, conditions or places.

edged knives. Then follows the salt-ing, which is done in large tanks or earthen vessels capable of holding 300 to 500 skins each. The skins remain in pickle some ten to fourteen days and are then taken out one by one and spread on a table, where they are once more carefully examined and scraped.

This finished, they are spread out in the sun to dry for twelve hours or so, by which time they are bone dry, but very dirty, for flour, salt and water have formed a paste, and the fine curls are all stuck together and full of lumps. To get rid of these the skins are once more washed in running water. They are next thoroughly rinsed, well shaken and placed woolly side down on the sun warmed pebbles of the river bed. Before they have time to dry hard they are sprinkled all over with a thin coating of fine barley flour.

At sunset they are taken up and handed to the classers. Each skin is stamped with its quality mark, and then all are stacked in pairs, wool against wool, and tied round the legs with red string, after which they are ready for making up into tales.—Wide World Magazine.

Woman's Work.

After dinner the other evening Mr. and Mrs. Brown started to speak of their respective duties, and soon an argument as to whether the husband or the wife had the hardest work to perform was in full swing. First Brown warbled and then wife sang.

"A wife," argued the good lady, "has to cook, wash dishes, clothe the kids, scrub the floors, sweep the house, make the beds, build the fires, carry up coal, nail slats on the back fence, dig!"

"Is that all?" sarcastically interrupted Mr. Brown.

"No," was the prompt rejoinder of Mrs. Brown. "In addition to those duties every wife has to keep her husband from making a fool of himself."

Gen. Joffre's New Chauffeur.

L'Intransigeant of Paris says that Gen. Joffre recently selected a new chauffeur, a reservist named Edmond Theodore from Niort, who passed his conscript service as a naval mechanic. His former driver was Boillot, the famous racing autoist, whose eagerness to gratify the general's fondness for speed caused him to take unnecessary risks. After one particularly hairs-breath escape Gen. Joffre, without reproaching Boillot, quietly announced his intention of making a change, not owing to the danger, but because Boillot's daring swerves kept him awake. He now sleeps peacefully through his hundred-mile rushes along the battle-front.

A Little Different.

Miss Vane—I know he was talking to you about me. Now, wasn't he? Miss Speltz—Well, yes. Miss Vane—I thought I heard him remark that I had a thick head of hair. Miss Speltz—Partly correct. He didn't mention your hair, however.—Exchange.

Friendship.

A friendship that makes the least noise is very often the most useful for which reason I should prefer a prudent friend to a zealous one.—Addison.

Quite Reasonable.

"That rich Mr. Smith is going to build a home that will cost $3,000,000."
"That looks as if the plumbing was included."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Kaiser Found Guilty Of Wholesale Murder.

KINSALE, Ireland, May 10.—When the inquest over the five victims of the Lusitania had been concluded to-day the coroner's jury returned a verdict charging the crew of the German submarine, the Emperor and government of Germany, with wholesale murder. "We find that the deceased met death from prolonged immersion and exhaustion in the sea eight miles south-southwest of Old Head of Kinsale, Friday, May 7th, 1915, owing to the sinking of the Lusitania by torpedoes fired by a German submarine.

"We find that this appalling crime was committed contrary to international law and the conventions of all civilized nations.

"We also charge the officers of said submarine and the emperor and government of Germany, under whose orders they acted, with the crime of wholesale murder before the tribunal of the civilized world.

"We desire to express sincere condolences and sympathy with the relatives of the deceased, the Cunard Co. and the United States, many of whose citizens perished in this murderous attack on an unarmed liner."

FAMOUS BATTLE PHRASES.

Undying Words That Inspired Men For the Fray.

Great fighters have been able, at critical moments, to address their men in words that inspired them with fresh spirit for the fray, and encouraged them to face frightful odds with a confidence born of their enthusiasm that carries all before it and almost wins the fight before it is begun.

Our own history, as well as that of the old world, is filled with striking instances. Who can recall without a thrill Farragut's command to "Go ahead!" when warned of the presence of torpedoes in the bay. Or Grant's calm response, "We propose to fight it out along these lines if it takes all summer."

Each of Nelson's victories was preceded by its own particular motto.

The Red Cross Society

The following letter has been received. Respirators.

Dear Madam:

In reply to your letter, I may say that the Militia Department has authorized the National Service Committee to procure the total number necessary for the Canadian troops who are soon to go overseas. This was done in order to have all the same and in exact accord with the regulations, also to prevent more being made than necessary. We are in urgent need of all kinds of hospital supplies and would be grateful for anything you could make.

Yours truly,

M. PATTERSON.

A letter has also been received from Mrs. H. S. Strathy asking the help of the Society in the "News from Home" movement. A sample may be seen at the work rooms, Saturday morning or afternoon. Special Hospital supplies are made Saturday afternoon and a large attendance is hoped for. Afternoon tea will be served.

The Sheet Shower held by this Committee last week for the University Base Hospital, was a gratifying success both as regards the number of sheets donated and money contributed. The shower was continued this week to enable all who so desired to make donations.

CASES SENT OFF.

Another fine case of supplies has been sent off to Toronto for the No. 4 General Stationary Hospital, (University of Toronto). Also a splendid case was sent this week to No. 2 Stationary Hospital at Le Tonquet, being our second donation of needed supplies for this hospital.

APPRECIATIVE THANKS.

Our very sincere thanks are offered to the many merchants and others of our town, who have done as many favors, and shown as much kindness, which is greatly appreciated by the Committee.

Our work meetings and afternoon teas continue every Thursday, and our Committee-room is also open each Saturday from 2.30 to 5.30 p.m.

Improving the Room.

A wealthy but miserly baronet was celebrated for having a magnificently decorated dining room, while his vizards were very few. A celebrated wit was invited to dine on a certain occasion, and the host asked him if he didn't think the room elegant.

"Yes," was the reply, "but it is not quite to my taste."

"And what change would you make?" asked the host.

"Well," answered the wit, "if this were my house, you know, I would have"—looking at the ceiling—"less gilding and"—here he glanced furtively at the dining table—"more carving."

Ether Wanted Not Author.

A man who did not articulate very clearly was present on the first night of a very badly-written and worse-acted play. A number of friends present, full of compassion, applauded at the end of the play and the man of deficient articulation was heard to call for the author, who came out to bow his thanks.

"What in the world did you yell for the author for?" asked a friend of the man.

"I didn't. You misunderstand. I was yelling for ether."

A Cold and a Coolness.

"Did you ever have a cold," inquired the plain citizen, "that you couldn't get rid of?"

"No," answered the purist. "If I had had a cold I couldn't get rid of I would have it now."

Thus the coolness arose.

...wins the fight before it is begun.
Our own history, as well as that of the old world, is filled with striking instances. Who can recall without a thrill Farragut's command to "Go ahead!" when warned of the presence of torpedoes in the bay. Or Grant's calm response, "We propose to fight it out along these lines if it takes all summer."

Each of Nelson's victories was preceded by its own particular motto. "Victory or Westminster Abbey" were his words before the battle of the Nile. "I have only one eye and have a right to be blind at times," said he at Copenhagen, as he placed his glass to his blind eye when the signal for recall was hoisted on the admiral's flagship. "I really do not see the signal," he added, and sailed on to victory. "England expects every man to do his duty" was the signal flown at Trafalgar, where the hero fell.

Waterloo produced several famous phrases. Strange to relate, Wellington's "Night or Blucher" found an echo in the words of his great rival when the issue of the fight was in doubt. "Oh, that Gruchy or night were here."

At the close of the day the Old Guard sullenly determined to stand their ground, formed themselves into a square and awaited the approach of the enemy, while their comrades fled in all directions from the field. In reply to the summons to surrender, their leader, Gen. Cambronne, proudly answered in the memorable words, "The guard dies but it never surrenders."

Very practical was Cromwell's advice to his men when about to cross a river in the face of the enemy. According to his usual custom he harangued his troops in a speech. He ended with, "Put your trust in God and keep your powder dry."

"To die in the last ditch" has become one of the commonplaces of proverbial philosophy. The words were originally used by William of Orange during the Dutch war of independence, when he was asked if he did not see that the commonwealth was ruined. "I shall never see the ruin of my country," replied the prince stoutly. "I shall die in the last ditch."

Frederick the Great was the author of certain characteristic sayings, but none more so than that which he uttered at the battle of Kolin, when his troops were wavering under a fierce fire. "Dogs," he jeered, "would ye live forever?" A taunt whose harshness was justified only by its success.

"Oh, for an hour of Dundee," has, with a change of name, been heard on many a battlefield since first it was used by Gordon of Glenbucket, when the Jacobites were hard pressed at Sheriffmuir.

A familiar phrase of war is Gen. Bosquet's exclamation when he witnessed the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaclava: "It is magnificent, but it is not war," a saying that will always be associated with that brilliant charge.

British Surgeon Never Met Such Inhuman Torture Before

The following is a letter from a British army surgeon at the front to a friend in London: It has been my painful duty to-day to witness the effects of a strong dose of the poisonous gases that are being employed by the Germans, and so appalling are they that I wish I knew how to make known this infamy thruout the civilized universe. You have known me long enough to be sure that what I tell you does not emanate from a hysterical or squeamish individuality, as an army surgeon has to face many duties that have shocked the roughest natures, but I declare on my honor that never in the course of my experiences in savage warfare with tribes of the Soudan, Ashanti, Northern India, etc., have I met with cases of inhuman torture to equal this poisonous gas procedure of Germany. It is in fact a slow, painful process of drowning brought about by the total destruction of the lung tissue. It can be most easily realized by the lay mind by comparing it with the effects of injecting a burning acid fluid into the lungs and so killing your victim by long drawn out, painful suffocation. The spectacle presented by those afflicted has made the blood of all onlookers boil, and to me who has had many friends in the German nation, soldiers and doctors, is added an intense disappointment, a feeling of shame in realizing that a Christian community should have employed our revered sciences, medical, and chemical in perpetrating this ghastly cruelty. Surely my professional brethren thruout the world should realize this to a man, yea, even some of those in Germany, and put a stop to this blot on science. If a humble member like myself may venture to suggest a means I would propose an international conference to include a German representative, and I am confident that the issue would be an ultimatum to the German Government demanding the just punishment of the perpetrators of this infamous blot on civilization.

FIGHT SATAN WITH FIRE

[Toronto World]

Now that the Germans have proved themselves Huns and have violated all the code that regulates fair fighting, why should not the allies turn on them and treat them as they have treated our side? If they resort to the fighting methods, the murderous tactics of pirates, why not go after them? The people of Canada are in no mood to mince words on this subject.

Our boys at the front are being murdered by poisonous gases used in disregard of the Hague Convention. Why should we not retaliate in kind?

We need not emulate the Germans in sinking unarmed merchantmen of neutral nations with helpless women and children on board, but we are quite justified in destroying their shipping and commerce without mercy. The rules of war cannot bind one side if the other side pays no attention to them. We on this side of the ocean are close enough to pioneer days to know that savages and wild beasts must be destroyed and that they recognize no laws except the law of slaughter.

Two gentlemen going out to fight a duel may observe a certain punctilio

If the Germans want to make war "frightful" let us make it terrible. Let every savage weapon they forge be used against them. The British people are humane and magnanimous, but a foe like the Prussian interprets magnanimity as weakness. Courtesy and the rules of the game are all right in their place, but they have no place in this war. ### "ALL BATTENED DOWN"

A WARSHIP IN A STORM IS ANYTHING BUT PLEASANT.

The Acme of Discomfort on a Man-of-War Is Reached When Everything Has Been Made Watertight and All the Decks Are Awash—British Sailors Prefer to Fight In a Gale If They Can.

While the words "battened down" may not convey much to a landsman they mean all the difference between comfort and misery to the sailor, with the risk of ill-health in the bargain. "Battened down" means much more to the modern sailor than to him of Nelson's time. In weather of which the old ships, with their high freeboards and protecting bulwarks, took little notice, the modern ship is battened down. The open, unprotected upper deck is swept fore and aft by high seas, and the smaller the class of ship the more is she affected.

Everything that science can contrive has been done to alleviate the discomforts of "battening down," which is closing all upper deck hatches to keep the seas which sweep over the deck from penetrating to the interior of the ship, but even then the mess decks are often awash. However, it is the lack of exercise and fresh air that tell most heavily on the health of the crew.

The difficulties with which old-time admirals had to contend, as far as the health of their men was concerned, were not bad weather but lack of fresh provisions and fresh water. These do not affect the modern seamen at all, as a plenitude of fresh water can be distilled and fresh provisions can always be replenished at the same time as the coal bunkers are refilled. An old-time sailing ship would ride out the heaviest of gales without taking much water on board, and even when forced to batten down the discomforts of between decks were infinitesimal compared with those of to-day.

It may not be generally known that with nearly every new type of ship the living space afforded to the men has grown less and less. This is due to a multitude of causes—increased speed, increase in the size of guns, and the multitude of auxiliary engines with which a warship is fitted—so we no longer find the great, airy mess decks of even thirty years ago, but a multitude of iron boxes which, at the best of times, have to its Process of Formation and the Way it Attacks Microbes.

The pungent, bracing effect of mountain air is largely due to the pressure of great quantities of ozone. Every one knows this and learnedly talks about the ozone in the air, but very few people have the slightest idea of what they are really talking about.

Nature makes ozone by allowing the ultra violet rays of the sun to act upon the oxygen of the air. Briefly, ozone is a particularly active form of oxygen. A molecule of oxygen is composed of two atoms, whereas ozone is composed of three.

As only two elements of oxygen can exist together, the addition of the third sets up a disturbance, which causes it to detach itself from the other two. Being thus detached, the third atom, which is now ozone, wandering around by itself, gravitates with great sureness and rapidity to any bit of foul air or any microbe which may be lurking in the vicinity, for the attraction between ozone and microbes is irresistible.

Like most fatal passions, the outcome is tragic, for the ozone burns up the microbes as soon as they touch each other. This is the reason that ozone is health giving; it may be truly said to eat up disease.—Detroit Free Press.

CUT THE RED TAPE.

Kitchener's Unofficial Methods in the Khartum Campaign.

It was in the Khartum campaign that Lord Kitchener's abhorrence of red tape was first impressed upon whom it concerned. A certain general, who may be called Fussymann, insisted upon issuing a daily order with all due forms and ceremonies. So importunate was he that in sheer weariness Kitchener at last dictated an order. Buoyed up by a blissful sense of importance, Fussymann hurried off to have it duly copied, registered, duplicated, sealed, signed and delivered in the good old style. Meanwhile Kitchener strolling out accidentally met Broadwood, his cavalry commander.

"Oh, Broadwood," exclaimed Kitchener in his softest drawl, "will you kindly take four squadrons and a couple of guns and push on forty miles to clear up the situation, and start in half an hour?"

"Very good, sir."

As the cavalry was jingling out of camp Fussymann came out of his tent with the order of the day. Upon finding that Broadwood's orders were totally different from the formal version intrusted to him by the commander, Fussymann gave Kitchener up as hopeless.—World's Work.

Making History.

When Kinglake was writing his history of the Crimean war he received letters from all sorts of people concerned in the war. One day a letter with a deep black border came from two people in the colonies, husband and wife, describing their grief. Their only child had been killed in the Crimea. They wanted to have him mentioned in the "History of the Crimean War." Kinglake was touched and replied by post that he would do his best if they would send him the necessary particulars. Again a letter, also black bordered, full of thanks, but with the following conclusion: "We have no particulars whatever to give you. He was

1300 Perish the

Queenstown, May 9.—Twenty miles from this port as the calm sea marks the grave of the arder Lusitania, first transatlantic liner sunk by a German submarine Friday, May 7th.

One hundred and forty-nine of souls who perished with her lie provided morgues in old buildings bordering Queenstown Harbor. Either were picked up dead or cumbered after landing.

The 764 survivors here are quartered in hotels, residences and hospitals some too badly hurt to be moved. The injuries of some are so serious that additional deaths are expected and nearly all are too dazed to understand fully what has happened.

SOME SAW PERISCOPE.

The survivors do not agree whether the submarine fired on two torpedoes. A few say they saw the periscope, though many attesting the wake of foam as a pretense came towards the vessel, only point on which all concur is the torpedo struck the vessel a blow amidships, causing her to almost immediately to starboard. This careening fashion she plowed forward some distance, smashing life-boats' davits as she did so, making the launching of boats almost impossible until headway ceased.

How far the Lusitania struggled forward after being struck and how long it was before she disappeared beneath the waves, likewise, are upon which few passengers agree. Estimates of the time she remained afloat ranging from eight to twenty minutes. At any rate the list to starboard so elevated the lifeboats on port side as soon to render them less and it is said only two on that side were launched. The first of these were filled with women and child. It struck the water unevenly, capsizing and throwing its sixty occupants into the sea. The Lusitania even then was making considerable head and the women and the little child were swept to death in spite of attempts of two stokers to reach them. These stokers, according to the passengers, were drowned.

LISTING MADE RESCUE PERILOUS.

After that several boats were launched successfully, but the steamer's list grew more perilous, the danger of such an angle it was perilous for all to cling to the side rail. Many by this time donned life-belts and jumped for several lifeboats broke adrift unoccupied, and the sea became a froth of oars, chairs, debris and human bodies.

The stokers, seeing a drifting body overboard, recovered it, pulled in nearly forty persons, most women. The Lusitania's crew, meanwhile, adhered to the letter to the instructions which had been given them and the discipline was rigid, although one or two subordinate officers said to have told a group of passengers who had climbed into a boat that there was no immediate danger, advised them to remain on deck little while longer. Whether this was due to the fact that these subordinates lost their heads or to their conviction that the ship's bulkheads would save her never will be determined, but such an incident occurred is attested by Ernest Townley, a resident the infinitesimal compared with those of to-day.

It may not be generally known that with nearly every new type of ship the living space afforded to the men has grown less and less. This is due to a multitude of causes—increased speed, increase in the size of guns, and the multitude of auxiliary engines with which a warship is fitted—so we no longer find the great, airy mess decks of even thirty years ago, but a multitude of iron boxes which, at the best of times, have to be kept well ventilated. When all natural ventilation is stopped the iron beams and sides begin to sweat and the atmosphere becomes foul and rank. Yet it is doubtful if in a general way the men trouble much about these conditions; cards and other games are played or sleep is wooed; the sailor now has a little motto of his own: "More wind less work," and it really works out like that when the upper deck is merely a mass of tumbling waters.

As a spectacle a modern fleet in a gale of wind is an imposing sight, and one hardly knows whether to give the palm to the stately leviathan or the pucky torpedo craft. A battleship can hardly be called an ideal sea-going craft; she is much too massive to be buoyant and too cumbered with top hamper to recover herself easily. So she staggers along butting at the seas but never trying to ride them; down will go her nose right up to the fore turrets, then, as she rises, hundreds of tons of water are lifted to be flung aft in great torrents. And yet for some reason known only to itself the navy prays that when it goes into action it may be in a gale of wind. Our men believe, rightly or wrongly, that no other navy has had so much sea training as itself, and that, therefore, the worse the weather conditions the better it will be for them in action.

The small cruisers and torpedo craft have nothing to do with weather; their job at sea is to get from one destination to another as quickly as possible. How they live through it is a mystery, for very often the only things above water are the bridge and the funnels; then one may see them poised on the crest of a wave with fifty feet of keel showing at each end.—Navy and Army.

Hard on the Judge.

Some of the "things one would rather have left unsaid" are really inspired by kindness of heart.

In a case of slander a lady had gone into the witness box on behalf of the plaintiff, whose counsel was examining her.

"Now, madam," the lawyer began, "please repeat the slanderous statements made by the defendant on this occasion just as you heard them."

"Oh, they are unfit for any respectable person to hear," was the emphatic answer.

"Then," said the examiner, coaxingly, "suppose you just whisper them to the judge?"

Not Catching.

Jane's sister was coming home from normal school.

"Why is she coming home?" asked the neighbor. "Is she sick?"

"Yes; she is very, very sick," said Jane.

"What ails her?" asked the neighbor.

"Well, I don't know exactly. Mamma has a letter from the principal, and he said it was lack of mental ability. I don't know if it is catching or not."

Perpetual Motion.

Alderman Curran of New York city worked his way through Yale college. During his course he was kept very busy by the various jobs he did to help with his expenses. On graduation he went to New York and was even busier than he had been in New Haven.

After some months of life in New York a friend met him and said, "Henry, what are you doing?"

"I have three jobs," replied Mr. Curran. "I am studying law, I am a newspaper reporter, and I am selling life insurance."

"How do you manage to get it all in?" said the friend.

"Oh," replied Mr. Curran, "that's easy enough. They're only eight hour jobs."—Youth's Companion.

Cunning of the Fox.

A fox on emergency will sham death to perfection. A master of hounds once noosed a fox in a whip as he bolted before a terrier. The fox appeared to have been strangled. When held up by the scruff of the neck his eyes were seen to be closed, his jaws gaped and the body hung limply down from the hand. He was placed tenderly on the ground only to dash off to covert.—London Standard.

An Insulting Pronoun.

The ritual of society, as women make it, is very exacting the world over, even in almshouses. The London Outlook reports a serious trouble among a set of workhouse officials. The infirmaries nurses, three in number, had demanded a separate sitting room and the delight of Sunday dinner therein, and the matron had sought to humble them by sending the cook to enjoy her Sunday dinner in their company. The brawny cook described what occurred as follows:

"Well, Nurse Blank, she come down and got inside the door. 'Four covers?' she says. 'Four? Who's the fourth?' 'Me,' says I. 'You?' she says, and with that she tosses her head and walks away."

Here cook drew a long breath, then continued, "If it hadn't a' been Sunday, gentlemen, I should have let her have it for calling me 'you!'"

The Sleeping Top.

A spinning top "sleeps" in obedience to a law of nature. The top at the period of its spinning called by boys "sleeping" has the centrifugal and gravitative forces acting upon it in a nearly balanced degree. Obeying chiefly the rotary force imparted to it by the player, the top seems for a little while, until that force is overcome by gravity, to be in a state of comparative rest.

Queenstown was almost as amazed by the tragedy as those aboard the Lusitania. The question on everyone's lips is, "Why did Captain Turner sue the well-known Cunard line, of course, so close to the Irish coast medium speed, and why not the liner conveyed?"

Several naval officers here said that the Lusitania received wireless orders to take a course in the channel, but the ship's wireless operator declines to say whether or not received such orders.

All day long morbid crowds rounded the temporary morgue where the bodies of 146 victims await identification. Although few have been identified, many bear evidence of having occupied the first-class cabin. In striking contrast to the historic sea disasters, the rate of mortality among first-class passengers seems to be heavier than among other classes on board. # 1300 Perished When the Lusitania Sank

Queenstown, May 9.—Twenty-three miles from this port as the crow flies, an irregular smear of flotsam on a calm sea marks the grave of the Cunarder Lusitania, first transatlantic liner sunk by a German submarine, Friday, May 7th.

One hundred and forty-nine of 1,200 souls who perished with her lie improvised morgues in old buildings ordering Queenstown Harbor. They either were picked up dead or succumbed after landing.

The 764 survivors here are quartered in hotels, residences and hospitals, some too badly hurt to be moved. The injuries of some are so serious that additional deaths are expected, and nearly all are too dazed to understand fully what has happened.

SOME SAW PERISCOPE.

The survivors do not agree as to whether the submarine fired one or two torpedoes. A few say they saw a periscope, though many attest to seeing the wake of foam as a projectile came towards the vessel. The only point on which all concur is that a torpedo struck the vessel a vital blow amidships, causing her to list almost immediately to starboard. In this careening fashion she plowed forward some distance, smashing the lifeboats' davits as she did so, and making the launching of boats well-nigh impossible until headway had ceased.

How far the Lusitania struggled forward after being struck and how long it was before she disappeared beneath the waves, likewise, are points upon which few passengers agree. Estimates of the time she remained afloat ranging from eight to twenty minutes. At any rate the list to starboard so elevated the lifeboats on the port side as soon to render them useless and it is said only two on that side were launched. The first of these according to the custom of the sea, were filled with women and children. The stokers, however, were thrown overboard and the Lusitania even then as making considerable headway and the women and the little children were swept to death in spite of the attempts of two stokers to rescue them. These stokers, according to the passengers, were drowned.

LISTING MADE RESCUE PERILOUS.

After that several boats were unheeded successfully, but the steamship's list grew more perilous, the decks tilting to such an angle it was unadvisable for all to cling to the starboard rail. Many by this time had donned life-belts and jumped for it. Several lifeboats broke adrift unoccupied, and the sea became a froth of men, chairs, debris and human bodies. The stokers, seeing a drifting boat, jumped overboard, recovered it and filled in nearly forty persons, mostly women. The Lusitania's crew, meanwhile, adhered to the letter to the instructions which had been given them, and the discipline was rigid, although the two subordinate officers are said to have told a group of passengers who had climbed into a boat that there was no immediate danger, and advised them to remain on deck a while longer. Whether this was due to the fact that these subordinates at their heads or to their conviction at the ship's bulkheads would save or never will be determined, but that an incident occurred is attested by Ernest Townley, a resident of

of lack of discipline, as most of them were picked up from the water.

The captain of the trawler who arrived in the harbor soon after the accident with 146 survivors, mostly women and children, when reproached for not staying longer on the chance of picking up more survivors, said:

"There were many left in the water, but they were all dead and many so horribly mangled, I thought it better to bring ashore my boatload of suffering women, as they could not have stood much more."

A PITIFUL SIGHT.

These women presented a pitiful sight as they wandered aimlessly about searching without hope for loved ones who must have gone down with the ship.

Relatives and friends of passengers who had gone in high spirits to Liverpool to meet the incoming ship, began to arrive here yesterday to search for the missing, but the small roll of survivors meant heartbreaking disappointment for most of them. Among the number was William Crichton, a prominent business man in London, and a former resident of Baltimore, who searched in vain among the survivors and in the morgues for a trace of his wife.

HE SAVED CAPTAIN.

Master-at-Arms Williams, of the Lusitania, is the proudest member of the remnant of the crew, for it was his keen eye which caught the flash of gold braid on Captain Turner's arm when the commander was about to throw up his hands, after being in the water two hours and a half.

The Cunard Line has a fleet patrolling the spot where the liner sank in the hope that it may pick up a few stragglers.

At the beginning of the inquest yesterday the coroner spoke at considerable length, denouncing the Germans. He said he hoped all victims buried here would be given full military honors.

The dragging of lifeboats was explained by a number of passengers and members of the crew by the statement that the second torpedo severed several steam pipes from the engines. The Lusitania had been sent full speed ahead when the first torpedo was seen, and it was impossible to stop her headway by reversing the engines when the necessity for lowering the boats was realized.

Scarcely a ripple left When Lusitania Vanished

"We witnessed the most horrible scene of human futility it is possible to imagine. When the Lusitania had turned almost over she suddenly plunged bow foremost into the water, leaving her stern high in the air. People on the aft deck were fighting with wild desperation to retain a footing on the almost perpendicular deck, while they fell over the slippery stern like crippled flies. Their cries and shrieks could be heard above the hiss of escaping steam and the crash of bursting boilers. Then the water mercifully closed over them, and the big liner disappeared, leaving scarcely a ripple behind her."

"Twelve lifeboats were all that were of our floating home. In a time which could be measured by seconds

Liner's Escape Cut Off By Several Submarines

LONDON, May 9th, 11 p.m.—"The only problem now is to identify the nameless dead."

Thus Supt. Dodd of the Cunard Co. dashed any lingering hope that there might be further survivors of the Lusitania.

So far as can be ascertained, about 700 persons escaped when the Lusitania took her final plunge after being struck by German torpedoes, but of these 45 have since died from exposure or from injuries.

The death roll, as estimated here, totals well up to 1500.

Lord Mersey is to conduct an enquiry into the sinking of the vessel, and until that begins, official opinion as to how the Lusitania came to be caught, and why so many lives were lost, will remain a secret.

SEVERAL IN WAIT.

The general unofficial opinion is that several German submarines were assigned to the task of attacking the Cunard liner and that they manoeuvred her into a position where she could not escape. Passengers say that for some time before the first torpedo was fired the Lusitania had altered her course, and they ascribe this to the fact that one of the German submarines had shown herself, sending the big liner in the direction where other underwater craft were awaiting to strike with their deadly torpedoes. These submarines, naval experts believe, are of the latest type of probably 1400 tons and much more powerful than any possessed by other navies.

TRAFFIC AS USUAL

Beyond anger at the Germans, the catastrophe has had no effect on the British people. Steamers are arriving and departing as usual, and even the steamers to Ireland are being freely patronized.

The heavy loss of life on the Lusitania was due, in the belief of rescued passengers, to the fact that some officers at least assured them, after the first torpedo struck home, that the Lusitania would remain afloat and could make Queenstown. Preparations, it is true, were made to launch the boats, but before this could be done a second torpedo hit the Steamer and she listed so badly that the crew could only work the boats on one side of the ship.

SINGLE TORPEDO BLEW UP LINER LURNER THINKS

LONDON, May 10th.—The Cunard Line steamer Lusitania, which was sunk last week of Old Head of Kinsale by a submarine, was struck by but one torpedo, according to the testimony of Captain Turner of the steamer given to-day at the coroner's inquest at Kinsale. But this deadly missile found a vital spot and sent the liner to the bottom in less than twenty minutes, carrying with her over 1000 souls.

The cause for the heavy loss of life, the absence of any naval escort for the threatened vessel and the suddenness with which she sank afford room for much speculation. Captain Turner in declaring that one torpedo did all the damage, said the second explosion which the passengers heard was an internal one, and that the engines having been out of commission it was impossible to stop the Lusitania and permit of her boats being lowered properly.

INTERNAL EXPLOSION.

The idea of an internal explosion is supported by naval experts, who point out that if the torpedo had exploded on contact with the steamer it would have only been disabled, or had one or two of her compartments flooded. It is evident, however, they say, that if the torpedo penetrated the hull and the charge of 420 pounds of explosive was detonated it would have created an effect similar to the explosion of a magazine within a ship. There is little wonder, therefore, they say, that the Lusitania sank so rapidly or that so many persons were killed by the fumes of the explosive.

On the question of why no naval escort accompanied the Lusitania, Mr. Churchill explained in the House of Commons that the policy of the admiralty is that merchantman must look after themselves. This policy was due to the fact that the admiralty had not sufficient destroyers to escort all merchant ships, they being required to guard the continuous stream of transports from England to France, and to protect the English east coast from German raids.

WILL NOT DIVERT DESTROYERS.

Naval observers are of the opinion that the use of destroyers for the protection of shipping is probably what the Germans are trying to force England to give, but they say that the admiralty, with its eye first on the naval and military needs of the country, will not divert its ships for other purposes. Some of the members of the house of commons, however, express the belief that a steamer that is particularly threatened with destruction should be especially protected, and the matter of convoys doubtless will be further discussed in parliament.

All this discussion, however, has not lessened the anger of the people at the action of Germany, which resulted in the loss of so many lives of noncombatants. In some towns where there are considerable German populations rioting has occurred, while more staid businessmen have decided to exclude all men of enemy countries and even naturalized Britishers of Germanic descent, from the exchanges of the country.

Another effect of the sinking of the Lusitania has been to boom recruiting.

With an ashen face and a trembling hand, Digby stooped to pick the damned thing up; but Alan was beforehand with him, and got his fingers first upon the card.

"Now will you believe?" Digby demanded huskily.

"In what? A simple coincidence?" Alan flouted. "Not I! Who knows I'm in New York—or that the Arthur Lawrence for whom your agent engaged these rooms was Alan Law. No, my friend: it's a bit too thick for me. Take my word for it, this is nothing more nor less than a souvenir of a poker-party held by yesterday's tenant of this suite."

"Perhaps—perhaps!" Digby assented, stroking tremulous lips. "But I'm afraid for you, my boy. Who knows that Trine's spies were not watching my man when he made this reservation? Who knows but that 'Arthur Lawrence' was too thin a disguise for Alan Law? I tell you, I'm frightened to the marrow of my old bones! Do me this favor at least, my boy: now that you've been warned, whether by accident or design—we won't argue that—do leave town—go incognito to some quiet place near by and wait there for the sailing of the next transatlantic steamer. Oh, surely you can't deny me this one wish of my fond old heart, my boy!"

With a gesture of unfeigned affection Alan dropped a hand on Digby's shoulder.

"There's nothing on earth I would not do for you," he said: "you've been a father and a mother to me ever since I can remember, even if we were separated, most of the time, by three thousand miles of salt water. But this thing—I can't do it, even for you. I can't do it even for myself. Rose Trine is here in New York, in the hands and at the mercy of her father and sister: and you may judge what their mercy will be when you learn all that she has done for me. I won't go and I can't go until I find her and take her with me. And that is final."

"Then," Digby struck in, grasping wildly at a straw of hope, "I have your word you'll go, providing I find and restore Rose to you?"

"You have my word to that, unquestionably. Bring Rose to me, and I'll gladly shake the dust of New York from my shoes, and never return till Trine is put away comfortably in his grave."

"It shall be done," Digby promised. "It must!"

"You believe that?"

"In twelve hours Rose shall be restored to you."

"Will you make a book on it? I'll bet you something happens—and hope I lose into the bargain. If you believe you can carry out your promise, wire the White Star line to reserve the best available suite on the Oceanic, sailing tomorrow morning at ten."

that seemed an uncommonly stubborn reluctance, and got his way.

He could not know that another skulked behind a barrier of lime barrels and overheard all that passed and, when Alan had ducked smartly into the unfinished building, rose and stole after him with footsteps as noiseless as a cat's and a face that had the savagery of a tiger's when it was transiently revealed in a shaft of moonlight.

At length Alan gained the gridiron of girders on a plane with the lighted window across the way, and crept along one of these, gingerly on his hands and knees, until he came to its end and might, if he cared to, look down a hundred feet to the sidewalks.

That view, however, did not tempt; he kept his eyes level; and was rewarded with a bare glimpse of a prettily-papered wall, framed in the lace of half-drawn curtains.

And of sudden—whether through fortuity, or instinct, or the psychological attraction of his steadfast concentration—the tenant of the room came to the window and stood there for a little, looking pensively out, altogether unconscious of the watcher in his aerial coign.

Again a horrible uncertainty harassed him. Was the woman Rose or Judith? That she was one of these he could plainly see. But which? Dared he assume his hopes fulfilled?

With difficulty he detached his hungry vision from her, and drawing from his pocket a small notebook, tore out a blank page, placed this flat on the girder, found a pencil, and with the assistance of a ray or two of moonlight scrawled a message of almost stenographic brevity.

When he looked up from this task, she had vanished.

Sitting up, astride the girder, he took his watch—a cheap affair he had picked up when reclothing himself in the garments of civilized society, at Providence, that morning—opened the back of the case, and closed it upon the folded message.

Then drawing back his arm, he breathed a silent prayer to the god of all true lovers, and cast it from him with all his might—with such force that it almost unseated him at the end of the swing. But nothing less would have served to bridge that yawning chasm.

And the watch flew straight and true, squarely through the lighted window and to the further wall.

At that very instant of his exultation over an obstacle overcome, he heard a sound behind him of heavy breathing.

The assassin had come that close upon his prey when Alan turned and discovered his peril.

The same moonbeam which had aided Alan in the composition of his message struck across the other's face, and showed it like a hideous Chinese rific exertions and physically sick with terror.

And in this state Alan left him: he had done enough; let the man shift for himself from this time on.

CHAPTER XXV.

Changeling.

In the vague, chill gray of that dull and desolate dawn, Judith stirred abruptly on the couch of a sleepless night, and with the rapidity of one who has arrived at a settled purpose after a long period of doubt and perplexity, rose and bathed and dressed herself in negligence.

In the adjoining room she could hear small, stealthy noises—the sounds made by her sister moving about and preparing against the unguessable moment when her rescue would be attempted, according to the information conveyed in that midnight message.

For chance had conspired with her insomnia to station Judith in the recess of her darkened window, idly viewing the gaunt framework of the unfinished building from an angle which, when Alan edged out along the girder, showed him plainly in silhouette against the sky.

In Judith's eyes his identity was unmistakable. She had hardly needed the night-glasses which presently she brought to bear upon him at the moment when he was laboriously inditing his message—while grim death stalked him from behind.

She had seen him throw the watch and had heard the double thump of its impact with the wall and floor of Rose's bedchamber.

And she had witnessed with wildly beating heart that duel in the air—able to surmise its outcome only from the fact that the victor spared the life of the vanquished.

The clock was striking six as she left her room: across the street workmen were streaming into the building to begin the labors of the day.

Brushing unceremoniously past the drowsy and indifferent guard in the corridor outside the door to Rose's room, Judith turned the key that remained in the lock on the outside, removed it, entered, and locked the door behind her.

Without any surprise she found her sister already dressed to the point of donning her outer garments.

Rendered half-frantic by this unexpected interruption, threatening as it did the perilous scheme that Alan had proposed, Rose greeted her sister with a countenance at once aghast and wrathful.

"What do you want?" she demanded tensely.

"To come to an understanding with you," Judith told her coolly.

"There is no understanding possible between us: you know that as well as I."

"Yet one there must be."

"I insist that you leave this room at once!"

"Insist by all means—and be damned! I may leave this room—and I may not, dear little sister. But one of us will never leave it alive."

With a start of terror, Rose chrank back from this strange, wild thing that wore the very shape and semblance of herself.

"What do you mean? You cannot mean to murder me in cold blood, Judith?"

"Not I!" Judith laughed harshly. "But, since it has pleased Destiny to decree that we must both love one man—let Destiny decide between us."

"Not you—but him. If you're little sister, I will shoot Alan dead when he comes to keep his appointment with you."

"Ah!" Rose cried in mingled fear and amazement. "How did you out?"

"Never mind. Is it a bargain, about the trey of hearts? Remember I shall keep my word about this lot."

With a shudder Rose bowed her head.

"Deal," she muttered fearfully, may God judge between us!"

One by one she stripped the cards from the top of the deck, dealing to Rose, then to herself.

One by one they fluttered to table on either side the glass of peace and fell face uppermost.

The trey of hearts fell to Judith. There was an instant of silent ended by Rose, as Judith's hand steadily toward the glass.

"Judith!" she implored. "Don't beg of you—I didn't mean it—I back my consent—"

"Too late!" said Judith, lifting glass and eyeing its contents with strange smile.

"Judith! you cannot mean to do it?"

"Can't I, though?" the other laughed mirthlessly. "Just watch me!"

With a strangled cry Rose covered her face with her hands to shut the sight, stood momentarily swayed and dropped to the floor in a com faint.

Delaying only to recognize this phenomena with a pitying smile for weakness of spirit that caused Judith's glance darted through the window and saw that which caused her stay her hand an instant longer.

On the topmost tier of girders or building opposite, Alan Law, amid a little knot of amused and mated laborers, one foot in the steel hook of the hoisting tackle, hands clasping the chain that lifted it to the gigantic block.

And as Judith stared, he smiled something said by one of those to some person invisible.

Immediately the arm began to move slowly through blocks. Very gently he was swung and outward.

With a cry Judith flung the piece heedlessly from her, leaped across room, and snatched up the street ments Rose had dropped at her sister's entrance.

In another moment she was springing madly into them.

Before the shadow of Alan, clinging to the hook and chain, fell athwart my shoes, and never return till Trine is put away comfortably in his grave."

"It shall be done," Digby promised. "It must!"

"You believe that?"

"In twelve hours Rose shall be restored to you."

"Will you make a book on it? I'll bet you something happens—and hope I lose into the bargain. If you believe you can carry out your promise, wire the White Star line to reserve the best available suite on the Oceanic, sailing tomorrow morning at ten—and make arrangements for a marriage before the boat sails."

"I'll go you," Digby agreed: "and if I fail, I forfeit the cost of the reservation. But about this marriage—"

He hesitated.

"You'll have to have a license in this state—and can't get one except by applying in person with your bride-to-be. There won't be time—"

"Then we'll marry in Jersey!" Alan insisted. "Dig up some clergyman over there, if you don't know one yourself—"

"Oh, I'm well acquainted with the very man!"

CHAPTER XXIV.

The Time o' Night.

Not ill-pleased to be left to his own devices (whose proposed character Digby would never have approved had he so much as suspected them) Alan none the less deferred action until after midnight.

And espionage was all he feared—save and except always, of course, failure to find his Rose.

It was about one in the morning when he arrived inconspicuously (but not so much so as to seem deserving of police surveillance) in the neighborhood of the Riverside drive home of his mortal enemy, a grim white house that towered, stark and tall, upon a corner.

His preliminary reconnaissance provided little more than comfortless exercise. Huge, still, its wall bathed in the milk and ink of moonlight and shadow, all its windows dark but one—and that one, in the topmost tier, showed only a feeble glimmer, so slight that Alan almost overlooked it.

But once discovered, it focused upon itself his thoughts with a power little less than hypnotic.

He believed with small doubt that Rose was a prisoner within those walls; that Judith must have conveyed her there with all speed.

And, this being the presumptive case, that small, high window of the light might well be hers.

Directly across the street from the Trine residence, on the opposite corner, a colossal apartment structure stood half-finished, stonework to its second story, gaunt iron skeleton rearing above.

To his infinite disgust, Alan found the guardian very wide awake, very much on the job: no chance here to steal unseen into the building.

This in itself might have been deemed a suspicious circumstance: not for nothing does an honest night watchman so deny the laws of nature and the tenets of his craft. But Alan merely praised the man while cursing the very fact of his existence; and, accosting, overcame with bank-notes chasm.

And the watch flew straight and true, squarely through the lighted window and to the further wall.

At that very instant of his exultation over an obstacle overcome, he heard a sound behind him of heavy breathing.

The assassin had come that close upon his prey when Alan turned and discovered his peril.

The same moonbeam which had aided Alan in the composition of his message struck across the other's face, and showed it like a hideous Chinese mask of deadly hatred, with its eyeballs glaring and its lips drawn back from the naked blade gripped between its teeth—a stiletto nothing short of a foot in length.

With a sharp, startled movement, Alan swung himself bodily about, so that, seated again astride the girder, he faced the assassin who sat up, straddling the girder, his feet hooked beneath it a stiletto poised in his right hand to strike.

But even now Alan was in little or no better case than before. If he faced the thug, he faced him with no arms other than his bare hands. He had not even a pen-knife in his pockets.

With a low cry of desperation Alan snatched off his hat, a soft and shapeless felt affair, and flung it squarely in the fellow's face.

Before he could recover—before, that is, it dropped away and cleared his vision, Alan had bent forward and grasped the wrist of the hand that held the knife.

He snatched simultaneously at the other hand, but it eluded him.

Alan had this advantage, as long as the knife might not strike—that his right arm was free, while the assassin had only his left. With this he strove persistently to reach his knife-hand and possess himself of the weapon. As persistently Alan foiled his purpose by dragging the knife-hand toward him and swinging it far out to one side. At the same time he struck repeatedly with his clenched right fist at the other's face. His blows did little damage beyond disconcerting the other; but this proved a very considerable factor in the duel. In the end, they served together with that steady, resistless downward and outward drag, to break the grip of the man's locked legs.

Abruptly he pitched forward on his face along the girder, kicking wildly, grasping at the air. The stiletto fell from an instinctively relaxed grasp, and disappeared. And before Alan could release his hold, or ease the strain upon the right arm of the assassin, this last had slipped bodily from the girder and hung helpless in space, dangling at the end of Alan's arm—with no more than the grip of five fingers between him and death.

The shock of that unpremeditated turn brought Alan forward and flat on his stomach. And the strain on his left arm was terrific. He doubted if he could maintain it for another minute. Nor was there any reason why he should retain it. The end he had designed for his victim was merely his just desert.

And yet Alan could not let him go.

Thus the battle began anew—but now it was a battle with a man half-crazed and struggling so madly that he well-nigh frustrated the efforts of his rescuer.

In the upshot the assassin lay like a limp rag across the girder, head and arms dangling on one side, legs and feet on the other, spent with his ter-rust by all means—and be damned! I may leave this room—and I may not, dear little sister. But one of us will never leave it alive."

With a start of terror, Rose creaked back from this strange, wild thing that wore the very shape and semblance of herself.

"What do you mean? You cannot mean to murder me in cold blood, Judith?"

"Not I!" Judith laughed harshly. "But, since it has pleased Destiny to decree that we must both love one man—let Destiny decide between us and bear the blame of murder!"

"Judith!"

"One moment!" Crossing to a side table, Judith took up a glass from a tray that held a silver water-pitcher, and returned with it to the table that occupied the middle of the floor. At the same time she opened a hand till then fast clenched and disclosed a small blue bottle with a red label shrieking the warning "POISON!"

"Strychnine," she explained composedly, "in solution." And emptied the bottle into the glass.

A measure of courage returned to Rose. "Do you expect to be able to make me drink that?" she demanded contemptuously.

"Not I—but Destiny, if it will! See here." From a pocket of her dressing-gown Judith produced a sealed deck of playing cards. "Let these declare the will of Destiny toward us. I will break the seal, shuffle the cards, and deal," she explained, suiting action to word.

"The one who gets the trey of hearts will drain that glass. Is it a bargain?"

"Never! Oh, now I know that you are altogether mad!"

"Perhaps. Are you ready?" And Judith made as if to deal.

"No—never! I tell you I refuse!" Rose chattered, terrified.

"You dare not refuse."

"Why?"

"Because of this."

Whipping a small revolver from another pocket of her dressing-gown, Judith placed it on the table, ready to her hand.

"You will shoot me if I do not consent?"

"Not I—but Destiny, if it will! Window, she was dressed and clambered out upon the sill.

"Sweetheart! My bravest woman!"

The hook hung steadily within inches of the window-ledge. Alan tended his arm.

"Nothing to fear, except lest I let you too tight, dear one!"

Without a word Judith set her beside his in the hook, surrendered his embrace, and closed her eyes.

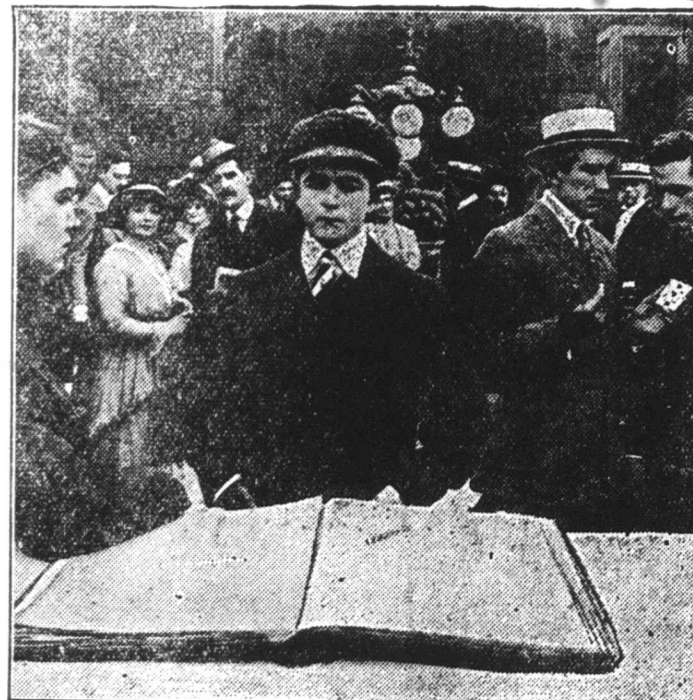

Immediately they were swung away from the window, over toward the posite sidewalk, and gently lowered to the street.

"Maybe this isn't a good scheme Alan exulted in the innocence of heart. "But I think it is. And the workmen think it a great lark told them the simple truth, you see that we were eloping!"

By way of answer Judith breathed only a word of tenderness.

And that instant the hook paused and Alan stepped off upon the sidewalk.

"Safe and sound—and not a step over there the wiser as yet!" he declared with a derisive nod toward home of Trine. "Come along. He's limousine waiting. In twenty minutes we'll be at the ferry, in forty minutes in Jersey, within an hour married within four hours safe at sea!"

Alan's Appearance at the Hotel Monolith.

"Not you—but him. If you refuse, the sister, I will shoot Alan Law and when he comes to keep his appointment with you."

"Ah!" Rose cried in mingled fright and amazement. "How did you find it?"

"Never mind. Is it a bargain, now, out the tray of hearts? Remember, shall keep my word about this pistol."

With a shudder Rose bowed her head.

"Deal," she muttered fearfully, "and may God judge between us!"

One by one she stripped the cards from the top of the deck, dealing first Rose, then to herself.

One by one they fluttered to the table on either side the glass of poison, and fell face uppermost.

The tray of hearts fell to Judith. There was an instant of silent dread, as Judith's hand moved easily toward the glass.

"Judith!" she implored. "Don't—I beg of you—I didn't mean it—I take my consent—"

"Too late!" said Judith, lifting the glass and eyeing its contents with a range smile.

"Judith! you cannot mean to drink it!"

"Can't I, though?" the other laughed breathlessly. "Just watch me!"

With a strangled cry Rose covered her face with her hands to shut out the sight, stood momentarily swaying, and dropped to the floor in a complete faint.

Delaying only to recognize this phenomena with a pitying smile for the weakness of spirit that caused it, Judith's glance darted through the window and saw that which caused her to lay her hand an instant longer.

On the topmost tier of girders of the building opposite, Alan Law stood amid a little knot of amused and animated laborers, one foot in the great steel hook of the hoisting tackle, both hands clasping the chain that linked to the gigantic block.

And as Judith stared, he smiled at nothing said by one of those about him, looked back, and waved a hand some person invisible.

Immediately the arm began to lift, the tackle to move slowly through the blocks. Very gently he was swung up and outward.

With a cry Judith flung the poison endlessly from her, leaped across the deck, and snatched up the street garments Rose had dropped at her sister's trance.

In another moment she was struggling madly into them.

Before the shadow of Alan, clinging the hook and chain, fell athwart the

CHAPTER XXVI.

Make-Believe.

For upwards of three-quarters of an hour of that golden morning which followed the night of his return to New York, Mr. Law was permitted to esteem himself the happiest of mortals.

And inasmuch as this is not only a longer uninterrupted term of happiness than is humanly common but is more of that emotion than ordinarily leavens the whole of a lifetime, Alan was perhaps to be envied, even though disillusionment when it came was sudden, sharp, and to him unspeakably shocking—a swift, unprepared plunge from sunlit peaks of supreme content to the black depths of a bleak Avenue of despair.

The beginning of the period was synchronous with the slam of a taxicab door that shut away a superfluous world from the company of two who loved.

The sound spelled safety as well as success in Alan's understanding.

The car slipped smoothly away from the curb, pursued only by a little gust of semi-ironic cheers from the little company of working men who had witnessed as well as measurably participated in the putative elopement from the house of Trine.

Vigilant for any indication that their evasion had had a witness in that strange home of deathless hatred, Alan watched it through the little window in the back of the cab until a corner blotted out the vision of it; then with a sigh of relief sank down by the side of the woman to whom his every thought, impulse and emotion were dedicated.

"Rose!" he whispered, and tentatively touched one of the hands that lay clenched in her lap.

She responded with never a sign to indicate consciousness either of his touch or his whisper.

And reminding himself of the strain imposed upon her by the experience through which they had just passed, Alan excused her unresponsiveness on grounds of reaction, and for the time felt constrained to let his sweetheart rest and regain her normal poise: there was bliss enough for him in the consciousness that he had won her safely away, that nothing now more than a short hour's drive across town and by ferry across the Hudson stood between them and the marriage that should prove the consummation of all their trials . . . Barring accident!

Alan had too often suffered the penalty of disappointment for over-indulgence in this failing of his for deprecating the unforeseen, not to make the mental reservation, "Barring accidents!" with a little shiver of dread.

Had any of Trine's household been cognizant of his daughter's escape, Alan argued, interference must have been instant.

Despite the reassuring aspect, the preoccupation of his companion so wore upon him that he was presently no longer able to refrain from disturbing her.

"Rose!" he begged again, closing a hand tenderly over hers. "Dearest girl, don't worry another instant! Do calm yourself: remember we are safe

"But that can never be!"

"You can't be sure. What if you were to find you'd been mistaken?" She caught her breath and added hastily—"That you didn't really love me, I mean."

"Oh, that's ridiculous!"

"I can't be sure. Nothing in life is permanent. What is love? Illusion of the senses! What is happiness? A will-o'-the-wisp! What is life? A make-believe!"

"Dearest!" He held her more closely still. "You are nervous and overwrought. You don't know what you're saying. You can't mean what you're saying. . . . But say that it's so—that life is all make-believe. Then make-believe you love me!"

"Oh, but I do, I do!"

"And make-believe for a little we've caught the will-o'-the-wisp—only for a little—until you wake up and realize that it's all real and true."

She closed her eyes again: "Yes," she breathed, "you are right. Let's make-believe it's all true for a little longer . . . and forget . . ."

He could by no means account for this strange humor; but he did his best to comfort her, none the less tenderly because of his mystification. And for a long time she let illusion blind her, resting quietly in his arms, making believe . . .

And this was quite as well; for Alan, rising for one last backward glance through the rear window, started involuntarily and choked upon an exclamation when he descried a powerful touring car tearing madly toward the ferry-house, its one passenger half rising from the front seat, beside the driver, and exhibiting a countenance purple with congested chagrin as he saw his car barred out of the carriage entrance.

Quickly sensitive to his emotion, the girl caught nervously at Alan's hand.

"What is it, dear?"

"Marrophat," she snapped.

She uttered a hushed cry of dismay. "Don't be alarmed, however," he hastened to comfort her. "He's lost the race: the gates are shut—even the passenger gates—and there must be a company spotter somewhere near by, for the gateman is virtuously refusing to be bribed by a roll of money as thick as my wrist!"

At that instant the taxicab rolled aboard the ferry-boat; the deck gates were closed; a hoarse whistle rent the roaring silence of the city; winches rattled and chains clanked; and the boat wore ponderously out of its slip.

The hook hung steadily within six ies of the window-ledge. Alan ex-ded his arm.

Nothing to fear, except lest I hold too tight, dear one!"

Without a word Judith set her foot ide his in the hook, surrendered to embrace, and closed her eyes.

Immediately they were swung away
n the window, over toward the opite sidewalk, and gently lowered to street.

Maybe this isn't a good scheme!"
n exulted in the innocence of his rt. "But I think it is. And those kingmen think it a great lark—I them the simple truth, you see:
we were eloping!"

y way of answer Judith breathed
r a word of tenderness.

nd that instant the hook paused Alan stepped off upon the side-k.

Safe and sound—and not a soul
r there the wiser as yet!" he deed with a derisive nod toward the ie of Trine. "Come along. Here's now; we fooled them handily—thanks to your faith and bravery, sweetheart!

and everything is going to be well with us from now on. Over in Jersey the minister is waiting now to marry us; and down at the White Star dock
the boat is waiting that is to carry us off to England the moment we're married. Think of that—and that I love you. Nothing can possibly break the strength of that combination!"

For another minute she rested as she had ever since sinking into her corner of the taxicab—moveless, taut, unresponsive.

Then a long sigh shook her to her very heart, and of a sudden the small fist in Alan's grasp relaxed and her face turned to his like a flower to the sun, a face transfigured, its lips now soft and yielding, its eyes unclosed and smiling into his a smile
all misty with unshed tears.

"Alan," she breathed gently. "It can't be true! I'm trying so hard to believe—but all the while I know it can't be true!"

He converted a skeptic with the mute eloquence of his lips . . .

Head upon his shoulder, the girl clung passionately to him. "Tell me again that you love me!" she prayed.
"Promise me you'll never let anything come between us. Promise me, Alan —promise me you'll be kind to me always, dear!"

"Can you doubt I will be kind?" he murmured reproachfully.

"I am afraid . . ." she whispered.

"How could I be anything else, loving you as I do?"

"I am afraid . . ."

"Why should I be unkind to you?"

"It isn't that. . . . I'm just afraid."

"Of what?"

"Of losing you."

little—until you wake up and realize that it's all real and true."

She closed her eyes again: "Yes," she breathed, "you are right. Let's make-believe it's all true for a little longer . . . and forget . . ."

He could by no means account for this strange humor; but he did his best to comfort her, none the less tenderly because of his mystification. And for a long time she let illusion blind her, resting quietly in his arms, making believe . . .

Only on approaching the Twenty-third street ferry they must needs rouse and sit apart constrainedly for fear some one might glance through the window and surprise their secret.

As if one needed the evidence of a caress exchanged to know that they were lovers, who had eyes to see the flushed loveliness of the girl shrinking back in her corner or wit to interpret the radiant happiness that shone in Alan's face as he bent forward and watched warily from the window.

The Ring.

Theirs was the last vehicle to swing between the gates before these last were closed.

for the gatekeeper is virtuously refusing to be bribed by a roll of money as thick as my wrist!"

At that instant the taxicab rolled aboard the ferry-boat; the deck gates were closed; a hoarse whistle rent the roaring silence of the city; winches rattled and chains clanked; and the boat wore ponderously out of its slip.

Wagner to the Musicians.

Wagner's little admonition to the mu-

Modernize your Kitchen

One by one the bugbears of housekeeping are being put to rout through the instrumentality of gas.

The modern kitchen — which means the all-gas kitchen—is now a recognized part of the up-to-date home. The all-gas kitchen lightens labor. It means a clean, wholesome, sanitary kitchen, as there is no coal dust or ashes to be spread around, and it becomes a real pleasure to work in it. Every housewife desires to cook and heat water in the most economical way, in the quickest, most dependable way, with the least possible work.

The All-Gas way is the solution to the problem.

The hot weather is here now and if you want a cool, comfortable kitchen this summer come and select your Gas Range and Water Heater now. We have ranges at all prices.

"Having been a great sufferer from Asthma for a period of fifteen years (sometimes having to sit up at night for weeks at a time) I began the use of 'Fruit-a-lives'. These wonderful tablets relieved me of Indigestion, and through the continued use of same, I am no longer distressed with that terrible disease, Asthma, thanks to 'Fruit-a-lives' which are worth their weight in gold to anyone suffering as I did. I would heartily recommend them to all sufferers from Asthma, which I believe is caused or aggravated by Indigestion".

HIGH COST OF ACTING.

Salaries of the Past as Compared With Those of Today.

Our imaginations are so nimble in this world of dollars that we have already ceased to notice the bagatelle of a vaudeville salary of $3,000 a week, such as some of our actresses are said to have received. We are already calculating on the salary of the future. The salary of the past was not so ambitious. It was a thing to worry over, not to speculate upon.

In the late fifties of the last century Mrs. Drew and her mother received $16 a week for the two. Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Gilbert received the same sum. At this time the custom was to give two plays a night, with singing and dancing between. The regular actors also did these specialties. They supplied their own wardrobes as well, and as the theater going public was smaller there was necessarily a constant change of bill. The $16 was undoubtedly well earned.

The first person to receive a salary of three figures was Rose Eyttinge, the most popular emotional actress of her time. Her first salary as leading woman had been $25, and at the time she considered it a great sum, for she had started on the stage at $7 a week.

Hamlet called the players "the abstract and brief chronicles of the time."

ENERGY MEASURED

"Respiration Calorimeter" Shows
Many Improved Methods.

ALSO VALUE OF FOODS.

Complete Kitchen Sent by Department of Agriculture to San Francisco is Composite of Many Model Kitchens, Illustrating Convenient Arrangement.

A machine by which may be measured the amount of energy expended by housekeepers in doing various tasks in different ways is a feature in the department of agriculture's office of experiment stations. By this machine, which is called a "respiration calorimeter," many other experiments may be carried out, such as, for example, determining the relative values of various foods. The accompanying illustration shows a model of this machine, which the department has sent to San Francisco for its exhibit at the Panama-Pacific fair. Within is shown the chair where the subject of the experiment sits, and without are seen the various pieces of apparatus used in measuring and recording the energy expended by the body in doing various tasks and in collecting data in experiments regarding the relative value of foods, etc.

A complete kitchen with a real stove, refrigerator, sink, work table and other necessities has also been sent. This kitchen is not a model in the sense that every housewife is to try to make hers as nearly like it as possible, but is rather a composite of many possible model kitchens and is designed to illustrate various essential principles of convenient kitchen arrangement. The American housewife, for whose special benefit the model has been constructed, must judge from it what appliances and improvements in arrangement will best fit her peculiar household needs and those of her purse.

One general idea emphasized by the department's San Francisco kitchen is that the size of the ordinary kitchen should be small rather than large if the room is to be used only for the preparation of the meals. It should be as compact as possible to save traveling back and forth. The stove, table and sink should be as near together as is convenient, and the distances to supplies and the dining room or pantry should be short. On the floor of the model room the distances most commonly traveled in preparing and

Hamlet called the players "the abstract and brief chronicles of the time," and indeed in no other business today do we find so clearly the characteristics of our age. No other profession is more overcrowded or more of a gamble, yet those members of it who succeed in finding engagements should have little complaint to make against the high cost of living, with such changes in their remuneration within our memory.—New York Tribune.

THE TURKISH HERCULES.

Ahmet Bey's Feat of Daring, Strength and Horsemanship.

The Turks tell of Ahmet Bey, an Ottoman officer who served against the Russians. Ahmet was possessed of a daring in keeping with his heroic proportions and physical strength. He was the beau ideal of a soldier, one whose military knowledge seemed instinctive.

It appears that Abdul Kerim Pascha, the commander in chief, while inspecting his troops one morning casually expressed the wish to capture a Servian prisoner from the Servian lines. Ahmet Bey, overhearing the remark, saluted and asked permission to get the commander a prisoner. He received the permission, although Abdul Kerim wondered at the request. Ahmet wheeled his charger, dashed spurs into its flanks and galloped straight for the nearest Servian outpost.

As he approached half a dozen rifles cracked, but Ahmet galloped on unharmed and marked down one sentry for his prey. The sentry fired at the audacious horseman, missed and started to run. Ahmet swooped on him like a hawk upon a chicken. He bent down, grasped the Servian by the collar and swung him across the saddle in front. Then he galloped back, bending over his horse's neck to escape the bullets, and handed over the prisoner to the Turkish commander amid the shouts of the soldiers.—St. Louis Republic.

Not a Square Deal.

Miss Mason was explaining to her Sunday school class the lesson for the day, the subject being the tares and the wheat.

"Now, remember, children, the tares represent the bad people and the wheat the good ones."

"Why, Miss Mason?" exclaimed a rosy cheeked boy, who had been listening through the lesson with deep interest. "Did you say the tares are the bad folks and the wheat the good ones?"

"Yes, James," replied the teacher, pleased at the lad's interest.

"Well, that's funny, I think," remarked the matter of fact child. "It's the wheat that gets thrashed, the tares don't."—Country Gentleman.

One general idea emphasized by the department's San Francisco kitchen is that the size of the ordinary kitchen should be small rather than large if the room is to be used only for the preparation of the meals. It should be as compact as possible to save traveling back and forth. The stove, table and sink should be as near together as is convenient, and the distances to supplies and the dining room or pantry should be short. On the floor of the model room the distances most commonly traveled in preparing and serving meals are indicated by straight lines.

"The fewer ornaments the better in a housewife's workshop" is the text of another lesson of this little exhibit. Corners are rounded; surfaces are plain; there are as few moldings as possible to catch dirt, which must be removed with so much effort. One feature is a table with legs that may be raised or lowered to suit the height of the worker.

The refrigerator as it stands would never in the world recommend itself to any thrifty housewife, for one part of it is lined with solid porcelain, another with enameled steel, another with zinc painted with enamel paint and another with unpainted zinc. However, this refrigerator preaches a sermon of its own, for the advantages and disadvantages of each particular lining are explained in labels attached. Each woman who reads may look for what suits her own refrigerator, and housewives from the north or from the south, from a high, dry region or a low, moist region, may each decide which feature is most adaptable for her own use and pocketbook.

A stew kettle is shown in several common materials in the model kitchen, but no particular make is recommended. The aim is to show sauce pans or kettles made of steel, aluminum, enamelware, copper and earthenware, and descriptive labels explain how each material excels in its own way and its disadvantages.

On the walls of the model are shown samples of the more common floor coverings and wall finishes, with labels setting forth the relative merits and drawbacks of each. Linoleum and oilcloth have their strong points, and so have tinted, painted and undressed wall surfaces. Varnished wall paper is good for some purposes and unvarnished for others.

To Set Stencil Colors.

If you will press a hot flatiron over a pattern that has been stencilled you will find that it will make the color fast so that it cannot be washed out when the fabric is laundered. If you have mixed too much oil with the paints and smeared the fabric, place a blotter over the smear and press with a hot flatiron. The oil will have been absorbed when the blotter is lifted so that it is not noticeable.

Following Instructions.

"Don't talk, children," said the teacher, "but when you want anything hold up your hand."

After a little the new girl held up hers, and when the teacher asked her what she wanted she answered, "Some candy, please!"

Permit me to introduce myself to the public generally. Modest and retiring both by nature and occupation, I have hitherto refrained from obtruding myself upon the attention of the multitude.

My name is Periscope. My principal object in life is to rise to every necessary occasion. When this demands my more or less immediate presence I occupy myself by holding up the mirror, not to nature, but to the enemy. Like an occasional idea which renders superfluous old systems of philosophy, I have come to render superfluous an entire cycle of inventions. I am the last triumph of mind over matter. The services in Grace Methodist Church on Mother's Day were very largely attended, both morning and evening. With the exception of the Go-to-Church Sunday, and the morning Dr. Gordon preached, the morning congregation was the largest during the present year. Next Sunday in the morning the pastor will speak on the text, "The Lord reigneth, clouds and darkness are around Him, righteousness and judgment are the foundation of His throne." As the late Guy Chapman was the librarian of Grace Sunday School, and also a member of the Choir, special reference will be made to him, and to our Canadian boys. At the night services the subject will be, "Russia, Her People and Progress." This sermon is being repeated by the urgent request of several members of the congregation. Since its preparation several items of special interest have appeared in print and the sermon will be changed in many sections, but on the whole will be as given, and will deal specially with the phenomenal progress of the Russians. ## A Midnight Blaze.

Shortly after midnight on Monday evening fire was discovered in the rear of the building occupied by W. G. Boyes as a grocery store, and Adrick & Co., as an ice cream parlor. Mr. Wellington Warner, who delivers the mail to and from the G. T. R. station, and who stables his horse in the rear of Mr. Jas. Oliver's grocery store, was the first one to discover the fire. When he went through the gangway to the stables he did not notice anything unusual, but before he had his horse harnessed the flames were bursting out in the small building used by Adrick & Co., for making ice cream, etc. He immediately notified Nightwatch Barrett, who sent in an alarm. The firemen turned out promptly and with the assistance of willing citizens, had five streams of water flowing on the flames, and in a short time it was under control. Mr. Boyes' barn was completely destroyed and the roof burned off the main building. The stock in the two places of business, although not touched by fire, was badly damaged by water and smoke, as was also the household goods of Mr. and Mrs. Boyes, who resided in the second story of the building.

The tanks smashed several ribs and planking, causing the water to pour into the boat. With a pail Mr. Bray worked incessantly, keeping the water out to prevent his engine from becoming stalled. Reaching shore some quarter of an hour later, he beached his boat and keeled over in an exhausted condition. However he saved himself, boat and cargo.

To the Entrance Board, Newburg High School.

Whereas the present arrangements for the entrance requires four long tedious days of continuous writing and.

Whereas it would be a great relief to have the subjects of part one completed before beginning part two, and

Whereas the inconvenience of gathering to the usual centres twice would be very small.

The following candidates at the coming entrance examination would be truly grateful if it could be arranged so that the subjects of part one would be written off on some Saturday in May or June instead of immediately following part two.

The above is being sent to the H.S. Entrance Board from all parts of Sheffield and Camden: It is believed that the pupils in the District of the Napanee Collegiate Institute will make a similar request of the Board.

Trinity Church Annual Business Meeting.

The fourth meeting of the Quarterly Official Board was held on Thursday evening, the 6th inst. Very satisfactory reports of the year's work were presented. The pastor reported an increase in the membership of the Church, after allowing for deaths and removals. Notwithstanding the general financial depression the givings of the Church for all purposes exceed those of last year. During the three years of the present pastorate there has been a substantial increase in the membership of the Church, and in the contributions of the people for local and connectional purposes. This increase applies to the offerings, through the envelope fund and plate collections, the offering to Missions, educational and other connectional funds. During the present year, the envelope fund exceeded $60.00 per Sunday. The Ladies Aid had a record year reporting $978.00. The W.M.S. reached the splendid amount of $520.00, including the givings of the Mission Band and Mission Circle. This makes a total for Missions of nearly $1500.00. The contributions for educational total $233.00, a large increase over any previous year. The following stewards were elected: W. F. Hall (Recording Steward), Thos. Jamieson, A. W. Grange, Uriah Wilson, M. C. Bogart, J. R. Dafoe, A. C. Baker and Geo. Thompson. The following Society Representatives were elected at the Prayer meeting on Wednesday evening of this week: W. J.
